Performing with Voices

SOMETIMES IT'S GOOD TO BE NARROW-MINDED.

You might say the Choralex™ Compact presents a rather narrow outlook on life. After all, at about 17 inches wide in concert configuration, our newest folder is designed for those who believe singing works best as a non-contact endeavor.

But besides affording the increased breathing room that all singers appreciate, the slim Compact is amply endowed with other important features. Like a rear-mounted hand strap for secure holding.

A detachable bottom strap to support your scores. Elasticized retaining cords to keep your music organized and separated. Even optional ring adaptors for hole-punched music.

In short, our new Compact is a folder with broad appeal.

To find your nearest distributor, or to see (and order) your Choralex Compact, contact us today at musicfolder.com, or at one of the numbers below.

The International Federation for Choral Music (IFCM) is a global organization with a clearly defined mission that is enunciated in the preamble of its statutes. It is important that we adhere to these guidelines and follow them with purpose as we move forward. These guidelines were formulated by a generation of leaders with grand aspirations that opened many avenues for development in the area of choral performance.

IFCM has the following goals:

- 1) To fortify choral music collaborations between national and international choral organizations and individuals interested in choral music.
- 2) To encourage and support the formation of choral organizations in countries and regions where they are currently non-existent.
- 3) To develop and promote the international exchange between choirs, directors, composers, and choral music students.
- 4) To coordinate and promote choral festivals, seminars, competitions, and other organized meetings of IFCM members.
- 5) To facilitate the dissemination of information about choral music repertoire, research, recordings, and other relevant resources.
- 6) To support agencies that control and influence educational policy in such a way as to promote choral music programs and academic interchange as it relates to choral music.
- 7) To remain a non-profit organization.

IFCM will benefit tremendously by adhering to these goals.

Even today these rules remain the fundamental guide and are still defining possibilities for future development. The magnitude and success of our organization cannot be measured only in terms of numbers of choirs and choral affiliations, and even less by our financial resources. The success of IFCM is measured by its artistic and human achievements and by its integrity of its principles, which are the bases for everything choral. Or successes include our network of communication—the venues for artistic, social, and religious integration—that we have been able to open, the training of new leaders, and the inspiration of others.

Everything that we do in this direction has a fundamentally selfless and philanthropic basis. We are a federation with endless potential, and this is the primary motivation of all the choral groups that comprise our organization. It is clear that we need financial resources, and it is for these resources that we arduously search for members that will immerse themselves in this mission with the same purpose. Our financial needs are not satisfied by public or private donations, so we have to be more creative in order to gain the sort of resources that will allow our organization to thrive, but never at the expense of the good faith of our members.

Nevertheless, the concept of philanthropic work within IFMC should include not only the economic aspect, but also personal interests and practical application. Choral singing is the best job in the world for those who believe in these values. It is a labor of love, a mission, maintaining high spiritual values and true ideals. In a world so pragmatic, these statements can appear too idealistic, but we know that they are not. If these objectives were to change, we would not be dutifully serving our cause.

IFCM has important future challenges ahead. Personally, I think that one of our priorities should be to become true pioneers within the developing countries and regions where we do not yet have a presence. IFCM should strive especially to fortify itself with firmness and conviction in the coming decades. Especially considering that the gap between the choral world in the developed areas, and those that are in many ways just beginning, is becoming more profound everyday. We still have work to do in many other regions of the world where choral singing is a hope, a reality of achievement and of integration.

Friends, let us continue to move forward in this direction.

Historical background

Ireland is one of the very few countries to have a musical instrument as its national symbol, and it is a pleasant tribute, both to the idea of the country's musical heritage, and to the romanticised view of the importance of music to the soul of the nation. The harp that is the Republic's emblem is based on the 'Brian Boru' harp, a 14th century harp preserved in Trinity College, Dublin, which has been erroneously associated with the high king of Ireland Brian Boru. Erroneously, because he was born in 940 and died in 1014 at the Battle of Clontarf repelling Viking invaders.

Ireland's fine musical heritage of songs, instrumental music and dance music is one of the richest of any nation, but it is a solo tradition, basically all for just one voice or instrument, and so ensemble playing and singing in Ireland has developed from imported European art music. This was initially at the behest of the British, whose settlement and colonisation of Ireland gathered pace from the 16th century, and this is how the European vocal art music forms of opera, oratorio and cantata entered Ireland. The term 'Anglo-Irish' is sometimes used - often in a derogatory way - to describe this aspect of Ireland's complex musical heritage. Visiting composers, particularly Handel, Arne and Geminiani in the 18th century, influenced local musicians, and of course Irish musicians studied abroad, and slowly a national tradition of Irish 'art music' has grown up, which is both obviously a part of European-based 'classical' music and yet has strong links with Irish traditional music, particularly through the (conscious or unconscious) use of traditional modes, ornaments and turns of phrase.

Irish traditional airs and dance tunes are a rich source of melodic material that can be arranged for orchestral instruments and voices, but the harmonies, and the way that the voices are arranged in a choral work, have their origins in European art music.

Church music

The other major contributory factor to choral music in Ireland today is the church and its long and distinguished musical history. Plainsong was nurtured by the pre-Reformation church and later by the Roman Catholic Church. The Anglican choral tradition has been the backbone of worship in the Church of Ireland, particularly in the cathedrals, principally St. Patrick's and Christ Church Cathedrals in Dublin, St. Fin Barre's in Cork, St. Patrick's in Armagh and St. Anne's in Belfast. Also, St Bartholomew's Church in Dublin, which upholds the Anglo-Catholic liturgical tradition, is one of the few in the Church of Ireland to maintain a choir to perform divine service.

The records of several Irish cathedrals indicate the presence of colleges of vicars choral in the 13th and 14th centuries, but the first recorded use of boys' voices is in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin in 1431 when the archbishop of Dublin instituted and endowed a college of six minor canons and six choristers very much on the model of Salisbury Cathedral in England. He wanted to introduce polyphonic music into the services at St. Patrick's, and a century later the same model was followed at Christ Church when the statutes defining the duties of the vicars choral and choristers were established in 1539, although the choir school of Christ Church Cathedral had been founded in 1493.

No traces of the music of the earlier Celtic Church appear to have survived (after all, it was an oral tradition), but there are liturgical manuscripts with musical notation from the later mediaeval period that is consistent with the use of Sarum (Editor's note: The modification of Roman Catholic rite developed and used at the cathedral of Salisbury between the 13th and the 16th century and adopted throughout much of the British Isles and influential elsewhere. The Sarum Use has provided the plainchant melodies that form the basis of many polyphonic compositions, including much English sacred music and some pieces by French composers of the 15th and early 16th centuries. Source: The New Harvard Dictionary of Music, Cambridge, Mass., London, England, 1986.)

A few examples of early Irish polyphony have survived, including a colophon set for three voices in a Psalter written in Ireland around about the middle of the 12th century, and a two-part verse setting in a gradual from the same period from Downpatrick.

An exhibition of mediaeval manuscripts was held in the Treasury of Christ Church in summer, 2004, which had as its centrepiece the Christ Church Psalter, which was loaned by the Bodleian Library, Oxford. This richly illuminated manuscript, which was made in East Anglia in England during the second half of the 14th century, contains a miniature that shows a group of monks singing before a lectern.

The present Choir of Christ Church Cathedral www.cccdub.ie is a mixed choir of twenty adult singers, and there is also the Christ Church Cathedral Girls' Choir, which was established in 1995. Consisting of twenty-six choristers and six probationers aged between nine and seventeen, it was one of the first choirs of its kind in Irish cathedrals and it provides girls with the opportunity to receive a musical education that had previously been available only to boys. Both choirs have a regular commitment to sing at the services.

CHOIR OF ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL

The Choir of St. Patrick's Cathedral www.stpatrickscathedral.ie consists of boy choristers and adult male singers and, uniquely in Great Britain and Ireland, is the only cathedral choir to sing two services daily during school terms. As at many cathedrals in England, Choristers at St. Patrick's attend the Choir School (which is the oldest school in Ireland) from the age of eight and at twelve move on to the Grammar School, combining a rigorous cathedral singing career with many other musical activities.

Just to mention one other Church of Ireland Cathedral, the Choir of St. Fin Barre's Cathedral in Cork cathedral.cork.anglican.org consists of men and boy choristers who sing at two services every Sunday. There is also a separate girls' choir, which shares the resources of the cathedral's musical organisation, but which is musically independent of the Boys' Choir.

Although many influential composers visited Ireland, some of whom stayed, it should not be thought that the traffic was all one way, for two of the most important composers of Anglican church music in England at the end of the 19th century were Irish, Sir Charles Villiers Stanford (1852-1924) from Dublin and Charles Wood (1866-1926) from Armagh.

The resident choir at Dublin's Roman Catholic St. Mary's Pro-Cathedral www.procathedral.ie is the Palestrina Choir, which was set up in the 1890s as a boys' choir and then transformed and generously endowed by Edward Martyn who is also known for his involvement in the Irish Literary Theatre, later to become the Abbey Theatre, which he co-founded in 1898 with W.B. Yeats, Lady Gregory and George Moore. As a young man Martyn had travelled in Europe and was so impressed by the quality of the choirs he heard in the great cathedrals that he determined that the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland should have music of an equivalent standard. Pope Pius X regarded the music of Palestrina as setting the standard to which liturgical music should aspire, and so Martyn particularly wished to promote his music. The Palestrina Choir was endowed, constituted and installed in St. Mary's Pro-Cathedral on 1st January, 1903. At present there are eleven men in the choir, twenty-four robed boys, seven senior probationers and ten junior probationers. They sing a setting of the Mass in Latin each Sunday. One of the former choir members was John McCormack (1884 - 1945) who sang in the choir from 1904 - 1905. He is popularly regarded as one of Ireland's greatest singers and is also known as John Count McCormack as he was made a Papal Count in 1928.

All the choirs so far mentioned also perform in a variety of other settings and occasions: with orchestras in public concerts, in radio and television broadcasts, and on national and international tours, often singing at services in different churches at home and abroad. Church and cathedral choirs are very often affiliated to the Royal School of Church Music in Great Britain.

Handel's Messiah

One of the most significant musical - and choral - events to have taken place in Ireland was the first performance of one of the most popular works in the choral repertoire, Handel's Messiah, on 13th April, 1742 in Neal's New Musick Hall in Fishamble Street, Dublin. It is what is an attractive and serendipitous musical connection, the building housing the Contemporary Music Centre now stands on the site. The choir for the first performance of Messiah was made up of the combined cathedral choirs of Christ Church and St. Patrick's, and from whose ranks five of the eight soloists, two counteralters, a tenor and two basses, were drawn. Handel directed the performance and he commented favourably on the choirs in a letter to his librettist, Charles Jennens, 'The basses and counteralters are very good and the rest of the chorus singers (by my direction) [sic] do exceedingly well.' The first performance was received rapturously by the seven hundred-strong audience (ladies had been requested not to wear hoops nor gentlemen their swords so as to ensure the maximum attendance) and Handel gave the money raised by the performance to be shared equally between the Charitable Musical Society for the Relief of Imprisoned Debtors, Mercers Hospital and the Charitable Infirmary. It was the governors of these institutions, together with the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland and the Duke of Devonshire, who had invited Handel to Dublin. Messiah has continued to earn unequalled funds for charity ever since, and between 1742 and 1744 four hundred and ninety imprisoned debtors were freed, largely thanks to the proceeds of performances of Messiah.

Professional Choirs

As there are comparatively few opportunities for professional choral singers in Ireland cathedral choirs are a particularly valuable source of employment. The National Chamber Choir www.dcu.ie/chamber is the only year-round professional choir in the Republic of Ireland and is one of Ireland's premier chamber music ensembles. The Choir consists of seventeen young professional singers and it is directed by Celso Antunes who took over as the new Artistic Director in 2002. The Choir performs more than sixty live concerts a year, both at home and abroad, broadcasts regularly on Irish radio and television (RTÉ) as well as on the BBC, and also performs with Ireland's leading orchestras and ensembles, including the National Symphony Orchestra of Ireland, the RTÉ Concert Orchestra and the Irish Chamber Orchestra. The Choir has been highly praised in Ireland and overseas for the beauty and warmth of its sound and the vivacity of its performance.

An example of a commercial and very successful choir is Anuna www.anuna.ie which was created by Dublin composer Michael McGlynn in 1987, although in the beginning it was called An Uaithne, an Irish term which collectively describes the three ancient types of Celtic music: Suantrai (lullaby), Geantrai (happy song) and Goltrai (lament). It is a choir of 45 voices with a particularly strong aural and visual identity, so strong and appealing that they have virtually transformed styles of choral performance. They perform music ranging from mediaeval chant and the music of Hildegard of Bingen, to music written and arranged by Michael, which through its haunting sound-world evokes the music of the ancient Celts and is strongly spiritual; contemporary and yet accessible. The singers, wearing cloaks and with great attention paid to presentation, stand apart from each other and move in a ritualistic manner as they sing, creating an atmosphere that quickly created a cult following for the group and its music. Michael's music is constantly developing and the group has undergone several changes over the years, particularly in the style of voice that he prefers working with, which now has a more ethereal, less-trained quality to it. By 1993, after many years of performing all over Ireland, refining their show, developing their sound and exploring their musical heritage, they recorded their first album Anuna which created great interest, particularly in the USA. In 1994 they recorded and performed a short choral piece entitled Cloudsong, which was the opening song of the Riverdance interval piece for the 1994 Eurovision Song Contest. They went on to tour with Riverdance, the show that was subsequently developed from it and which became a musical phenomenon. Anuna left Riverdance in 1996 and the group has a busy touring and recording schedule. It receives no official support (which may, perversely, have contributed to its success as it exists outside the formalised structures that underpin music in Ireland) and is very much the realisation of Michael's creativity, assisted by his twin brother John.

The National Chamber Choir manages to dedicate more than twenty-five per cent of its time to educational projects (see Education and Outreach on the website) and regularly works with primary and secondary school students on a variety of projects, particularly The Quest, which is the third children's opera that the Choir has commissioned. Written by Maeve Ingoldsby and Colin Mawby, all the solo roles are sung and acted by the pupils and there is also a students' chorus. At two points in the opera the students are invited to create the music and text. The Choir also run Composition Workshops, a two-year programme for senior cycle music students who work with choir members to compose a piece of music for the Choir. Students' work may contribute towards their Leaving Certificate music examination requirements and will be performed and recorded by the Choir. In addition, there is a prize for the composers of the most original group composition, and individual composers will be considered for the Victory Composition Commission (named after the composer Gerard Victory) to compose a piece for the National Chamber Choir.

RTÉ and choral music

The National Chamber Choir is funded by the Arts Council of Ireland www.artscouncil.ie and has a substantial contract with RTÉ. In 1995 it became Choir-in-Residence at Dublin City University, a move that has had a huge impact on the security and development of the group. The Choir was founded in 1991 by the internationally renowned conductor and composer Colin Mawby, but it can trace its origins back to the formation of the Radio Éireann Choral Department in May, 1943 when twenty-four trained singers were recruited to form the part-time Cór Radio Éireann. In 1953 a fully professional group of ten singers, the Radio Éireann Singers (called the Radio Telefís Éireann Singers from 1966) was appointed. In addition to their performing the standard international repertoire, RTÉ commissioned many hundreds of arrangements of traditional Irish tunes, in line with the policy of the time which was to present good quality orchestral and choral arrangements of the national airs and dances. The RTÉ Singers was disbanded in 1984 and replaced by the RTÉ Chamber Choir, consisting of seventeen trained young singers, and it in its turn was disbanded in 1990 as a result of the cap on advertising revenue that the Government imposed on RTÉ.

RTÉ also formed the Radio Éireann Choral Society in the 1940s, a larger amateur choir that was succeeded in 1985 by the RTÉ Philharmonic Choir. There are approximately one hundred and fifty voluntary members, and as the 'house choir' of RTÉ it is chiefly occupied with performing the major choral works with the National Symphony Orchestra. It gives at least three performances a year and members are auditioned every three years so as to ensure that the choir retains and develops its youthful and increasingly close-knit ensemble sound.

Cór na nÓg www.rte.ie/music/cornanog is RTÉ's children's choir, a highly-praised dynamic choir of sixty-five selected children aged between ten and fifteen who rehearse twice a week. They have a wide range of performance opportunities, including concerts with professional orchestras, stage appearances with ballet and opera companies, and radio and television broadcasts.

In an article like this it is impossible to give detailed accounts of the many amateur choirs - school, community, church, adult, mixed voice, single voice, operatic, etc, etc - that flourish in Ireland. Information may be obtained from the Association of Irish Choirs, Cumann Náisiúnta na gCór www.cnc.ie, from the Contemporary Music Centre www.cmc.ie, and also from Music Network www.musicnetwork.ie.

Youth Choirs

The Irish Youth Choir www.cnc.ie/html/iyc.html is administered by Cumann Náisiúnta na gCór, the Association of Irish Choirs, and was set up in 1982 with the aim of providing an opportunity for young Irish singers to sing together under the direction of professional conductors and tutors, and to perform demanding and rewarding choral works to a high standard with professional instrumentalists. It is conducted by its founder and director Dr. Geoffrey Spratt. Membership of the 120-strong choir is by annual audition and is open to 17 - 29 year-olds. The choir meets annually for a residential rehearsal course and performs throughout the country. The rehearsal courses and concerts are self-financed through sponsorship and through members' subscriptions.

Music Education in Schools

Music education in schools is patchy, although there are centres of excellence largely due to the hard work and inspiration of individual teachers. A scheme that did a great deal to raise standards and enthusiasm for choral singing in schools was run by the Department of Education for twelve years from about 1989. Schools could enter choirs (and orchestras) to be examined by the Department's visiting examiners in four categories, based on age. This was a useful way of raising standards in any case, and on average, schools would enter three or four choirs - although one school entered twenty - and each choir contained approximately fifty to sixty singers. The best choirs then performed competitively in the annual Schools' Choir Competition at regional level to select twelve to perform at the national finals in the National Concert Hall in Dublin. The winners received cash prizes. For ten years the competition was sponsored by Telecom Éireann and the Irish Press, but that ceased and then it was run by the Department's Music Inspector Oliver Hynes for a further two years but could not continue without commercial sponsorship.

Festivals and competitions

and in Ireland the premier music competition is the Siemens Feis Ceoil www.siemens.ie/feis in Dublin, now preparing for the 109th festival, two weeks of competitions in March-April, 2005. It is Europe's longest-running classical music festival and attracts over 2,000 entries from all over Ireland in approximately 170 competitions, including some valuable scholarships and bursaries. There are numerous competitions for choirs, categorised by age, voice, gender, repertoire and language.

Gerard Gillen established the Dublin International Organ and Choral Festival www.organfestival.com in 1980 with the intention of placing the organ firmly at the centre of a week-long feast of music-making by a wide variety of instruments and, in particular, choirs. The core of the festival is the Organ Interpretation Competition, but the choral singing is not competitive. The next festival will take place in June, 2005.

The Association of Irish Choirs

There are many other music competitions and festivals in Ireland (often called 'feis', pronounced 'fesh', plural 'feisanna') and information can be obtained about them and about many other aspects of choral music in Ireland from the Association of Irish Choirs, Cumann Náisiúnta na gCór (CNC), www.cnc.ie which is based in Cork. Funded by the Arts Council, CNC was set up in 1980 and promotes choral singing throughout the island of Ireland. It is committed to the provision of access to a wide range of services for conductors, choristers, teachers, choral representatives and participants. It facilitates the exchange of information on choral matters and operates an advisory and mentoring service for those seeking assistance with choir establishment and management, repertoire, training, competing and touring, and international developments and opportunities. CNC has well over 500 members at present who can avail of a wide range of useful services and benefits, and who also receive three issues per year of the CNC's very interesting and excellently produced magazine, In Choir.

A particularly valuable aspect of CNC's work is their annual week-long Choral Conducting Summer School, which provides intensive choral conducting training from basic to advanced level, and their 'Music in the Classroom' summer courses for primary school teachers. This complements the requirements of the music curriculum and provides a relevant and dynamic support to teachers in their classroom work. The CNC also provides short workshops and in-service courses throughout the year, and the conducting courses help teachers and students to realise the potential of the choral singing and conducting elements of the Junior and Leaving Certificate Music curricula. These courses are sanctioned by the Department of Education and Science and so can count towards 'extra personal vacations'.

The CNC has an extensive music library of choral music and members may borrow sheet music for one month, with longer borrowing periods available for multiple scores (for a small fee). There are 4,000 works for mixed voice choir, 2,000 works for female voice choirs, 1,000 works for unison choirs and 500 works for male voice choirs, and CNC members can also have access to the extensive collection of choral music in the Cork County Library.

Publishing

The CNC publishes choral music by Irish composers and arrangers, and has a large catalogue of works, ranging from simple unison and two-part compositions for junior choirs to mixed and equal-voice original compositions and arrangements for adult choirs.

As the mainstay and organiser for many years of much of the classical music that was performed and broadcast in Ireland, RTÉ has commissioned a large body of choral music, both arrangements and original works. For any enquiries about Irish music, either by a particular composer or for a particular ensemble, the most useful point of contact is the Contemporary Music Centre www.cmc.ie at 19 Fishamble Street, Temple Bar, Dublin 8 who can supply copies of works in their archive.

The Government Publications Office, An Gúm, which may be accessed via www.forasnagaeilge.ie, was established in 1926 and is the single largest Irish language publisher in the country. In 1999 it was transferred to become part of Foras na Gaeilge (Editor's Note: Body set up in 1999 and responsible for the promotion of the Irish language throughout the whole island of Ireland). Since its foundation it has published around 2,500 books and 350 pieces of music by Irish composers, both arrangements and original works.

A lively chat room of interest to choirs is Choral Ireland, which describes itself as 'a web resource for all enthusiasts of choral music of every genre'. Hosted by Yahoo, it may be accessed at www.esatclear.ie/~fanda/. It is very active and can be quite influential as a sounding board and as an advertising forum.

The CNC has its Bulletin Board for members' comments and queries, and this may be accessed through www.cnc.ie. It is also hosted by Yahoo.

The Stage

For those singers who are particularly interested in the theatrical side of choral work, the Association of Irish Musical Societies (AIMS) www.aims.ie is a useful resource. It hosts a two-day choral festival each May in New Ross, Co. Waterford, a festival that is open to both member and non-member choirs, which was begun in the 1970s as a platform for the choral societies and as a way of improving the singing in the musical societies. The Association also runs the week-long AIMS Youth Summer School which introduces teenagers to the various aspects of performing musical theatre and gives them the opportunity of working with a professional director, choreographer and musical director. The AIMS on-line Technical Directory is used by actors, directors, musical directors, choreographers, sound engineers, lighting designers, stage managers, musicians and other service providers in Irish musical theatre. There are a number of opera companies and festivals in Ireland with varying chorus requirements. The website for Irish Opera Online has details of the different companies www.geocities.com/Vienna/1340/oi_orgs.html and there are contact details on the website of the Contemporary Music Centre under 'Useful Addresses'.

Cork International Choral Festival

Perhaps the best-known choral music event or organisation in Ireland is the flagship Cork International Choral Festival www.corkchoral.ie which began in the early 1950s when the Government established An Tóstal in 1952 to encourage the development of springtime festivals, which would also encourage tourists to visit Ireland from Easter onwards. This imaginative attempt to begin the process of lifting the country out of stagnation and economic depression was taken up with enthusiasm. A varied arts programme was organised for 1953 in Cork, including a visit by the Hallé Orchestra conducted by Sir John Barbirolli. They performed Handel's Messiah with the Dublin choir, Our Lady's Choral Society.

The following year, 1954, the first Cork International Choral and Folk-Dance Festival was held, and it continues to be held in Cork City Hall each year during the four days that precede the first Monday in May. 'Folk-dance' was dropped from the title in the late 1980s, but there are still displays of folk-dancing by Irish and foreign dance teams as well as non-competitive performances by the competing choirs. However, the emphasis is very firmly on choral singing, and the festival, which is one of the most important international choral festivals in Europe, is noted for its high competitive standards, which are maintained by the practice of inviting only a certain number of foreign choirs (approx. twelve) of international standard to compete for the prestigious Fleischmann International Trophy, thus providing standards for Irish choirs to measure themselves against. Many Irish adult, youth and school choirs compete in the national competitions, for one of the aims of the Festival is to encourage music-making at a local level and to enable choirs from small towns and rural areas to take part. In all, the festival attracts some 5,000 participants, including choirs from both parts of Ireland. From the very beginning competitors have been required to sing one work by a living composer from their own country, a condition that was very dear to the heart of the one person who is universally associated with music in Cork, and who was personally responsible for having the initial vision of many musical projects and then having the energy required to make them a reality. This was the composer and Emeritus Professor of Music in University College Cork, Aloys Fleischmann (1910-1992) who was chairman of the Tóstal Cultural Committee from 1954-1966, and Choral Festival Director from 1967-1987. He also had to deal with the many critical financial struggles that have beset the organisers over the years, because good, successful, musically worthwhile festivals do not always attract the financial support that they need.

A unique, and very valuable, aspect of the Cork Choral Festival is the Seminar on Contemporary Choral Music, which was set up in 1962. It commissions up to four Irish and foreign composers every year to produce new works which are performed, analysed and discussed at a public seminar. To date 119 new works have been commissioned from 99 different composers and it has had an educative and exhilarating effect on very many developing Irish composers who attended the seminars. In 1972 the Seán Ó Ríada Trophy competition was established for young Irish composers commissioned by Irish choirs. As 2004 was the Choral Festival's 50th anniversary, the National Chamber Choir was invited to present a retrospective of works commissioned over that period, and they selected and performed works by Milhaud, Genzmer, Walton, Fleischmann, Shchedrin, Deane, Eben, Wilson and Ó Súilleabháin (Editor's Note: pronounced O Soolavoyne).

In 1998 a Composers in the Classroom scheme was begun, which offers music students and their teachers the opportunity to work, in their own classrooms, with professional composers throughout the school year. Students are required to listen to a wide range of music and to analyse and discuss various elements. For the teacher this residency provides an opportunity to work alongside a professional composer, discussing and developing approaches to creative composition in the classroom. The students' compositions are performed at a seminar held as part of the Choral Festival.

Ruth Fleischmann's recent book Cork International Choral Festival 1954-2004: A Celebration (published by Glen House Press and sponsored by Veritas Publications, ISBN 1 85390 767 7) is now available and it provides a fascinating account of this highlight of the choral world and choral year, with reminiscences from over 200 people who have been associated with the Festival in many different capacities.

In 2005 Cork will be designated 'Cork 2005: European Capital of Culture', and the Choral Festival will be at the forefront of the musical events of this very special year.

Mary McAuliffe - an Irish composer of choral music

Just as there is not sufficient space here to go into details of the majority of choirs in Ireland, neither is there space to go into details about the other essential element in choral music, the composer. Full details of Irish composers and their music are available on the web site of the Contemporary Music Centre, www.cmc.ie, but I thought it would be interesting to feature one Irish composer,

Mary McAuliffe, for whom choral music forms the greater part of her output. She began by writing musicals and choral works for school choirs during her school teaching career, and this was followed by various commissions for church choirs and major Irish choral societies, including a commission for a large-scale choral and orchestral work to mark the 150th anniversary of the founding of the Loreto Order, and an anthem and Mass to celebrate the beatification of the Irish Martyrs in Rome. She decided to embark on composition full-time, and then her life was changed by an enquiry to the CMC by an American conductor in search of Irish sacred music. His subsequent performance of her music paved the way for a succession of further performances and commissions in the USA from some of the finest choirs in the country, such as the Michael O'Neill Singers www.mosingers.com and www.mosingers.com/html/mcauliffe1.html who commissioned her to write Return to Old Ireland for choir and orchestra. After its first performance in 2000 in Atlanta, Georgia, Return to Old Ireland received a further nine performances during the next three years by different choirs and orchestras, seven in the USA and two in Dublin, an unheard-of achievement for a contemporary Irish composition. McAuliffe has been composer-in-residence and has given lectures on her music in a number of American universities, and her works are published, frequently broadcast and recorded in both Ireland and the USA. She has recently been awarded the first Ireland-Canada University Foundation Riverdance Scholarship, which is enabling her to work on a project relevant to both countries, a choral suite on texts from Newfoundland and from Ireland for the award-winning Newfoundland Symphony Youth Choir.

...Choral Music in Ireland: An Overview

14 The Contemporary Music Centre

Mary McAuliffe, in common with other composers and users of the CMC, has nothing but praise for the work of the Contemporary Music Centre www.cmc.ie in Dublin and its dedicated staff under its director Eve O'Kelly. The Contemporary Music Centre (CMC), which is primarily funded by the Arts Council (of Ireland), is Ireland's national archive and resource centre for new music and it supports the work of composers throughout Ireland. It has effectively raised the profile of Irish composers and their work throughout Irish society and around the world. The library contains the largest collection in existence of music written since the early 20th century by Irish composers (i.e. those of Irish birth or residence), as well as sound recordings, biographical and programme information, a reference library of books and periodicals, and information of interest to composers, such as performance opportunities, concerts, commissions and grants. There are c. 3,300 scores in the CMC, and the collection grows at an average rate of c. 250 each year. Most of the music is unpublished and is available for reference, sale, hire or inspection. There is an extensive archive of sound recordings that also includes many hundreds of recordings from the archives of RTÉ, the national broadcasting service. There are approximately 5,200 individual works in the CMC's library of scores and recordings, of which more than 1,200 are vocal/choral works. A number of works have been graded in terms of difficulty and this helpful tool can be utilised via the homepage of the website, www.cmc.ie, by clicking on Education & Outreach - Explore and Discover - Perform an Irish Work.

Sarah Burn lives in Ireland where she is a music copyist and typesetter who has copied scores and parts by hand and by computer for many of the country's composers and ensembles. She writes programme notes for concerts and recordings, and also teaches oboe. She enjoys the variety of these different, but complementary activities.

(1) The primary resource for information about Irish traditional music is the Irish Traditional Music Archive in Dublin www.itma.ie. The Archive, under the direction of Nicholas Carolan, was established in 1987, and is the first body that was exclusively concerned with the making of a comprehensive collection of materials, including sound recordings, books, photographs and videos, for the appreciation and study of Irish traditional music. It is the largest such collection in existence and is a not-for-profit facility that is open to the public.

(2) To explore further the history of music in Irish cathedrals, the first detailed study was made by W.H. Grindle in his book Irish Cathedral Music: A History of Music at the Cathedrals of the Church of Ireland, which was published in 1989 by The Institute of Irish Studies, The Queen's University of Belfast.

See also A History of Music at Christ Church Cathedral Dublin by Dr Barra Boydell, published by Boydell & Brewer, Woodbridge, 2004.

(3) The Irish composer and musicologist Brian Boydell (1917-2000) wrote many books and articles on music in Ireland, and his book A Dublin Musical Calendar, 1700 - 1760, published in 1988 by the Irish Academic Press, is a fascinating account of musical life in the city during a musically most important period. ●

Dossier Copyright

Letter to the Editor

Vincent Salvadé

We received the following remarks as a response to the article "Copyright is privatizing the Public Domain and no longer assisting Artists" by Mr. Smiers, which was published in our last issue.

The contribution of Mr. Joost Smiers is so exclamatory that it launches the discussion. It leads one to have an immediate reaction, in view of his "provocative" character. Without entering into all the details of the argument, one notices the following points:

- a) The article does not include the collective management of the system of rights. This is regrettable for a contribution intended for a choral magazine, since one knows that the collective management is the most standard form of exercising rights in the musical domain. The collective management permits distributing part of the royalties directly to the authors, and part to the record producers. This assures, therefore, a balance between the interests of the creators and of the investors.
- b) The article is based on the ridiculous idea that there would be on the one hand "good" artists, and on the other "bad" investors (namely the Industry). In reality, the former comes second. The intermediaries ready to invest the necessary money so that the creation is communicable to the public are indispensable. It is totally utopian to think that an artist could, by him or herself, communicate with his or her public, thanks to the Internet. The communication would in fact be very quickly drowned in the mass of created products. And if ventures were ready to - be invested in (for their own interest, certainly, but also so that a creator could emerge from the many products), one cannot see why they would not benefit from exclusive rights that permit them to profit from their investments (and to urge them to start this operation again).
- c) To replace the right of the author with taxation? One does not see what the advantage would be. Because the government would then find it necessary to determine how to divide up the money, it would therefore make the choice to finance one artist rather than another. Mr. Smiers denounces the dictatorship of the "majors" who govern the choices of the public. But his system becomes another form of dictatorship: that of the State who, in granting funds, would give more chances to chosen creators. The market very quickly charges itself to punish errors by investors (many maintain that the actual crisis of the CD Industry comes more from a certain artistic deficiency of the "majors" than of the phenomenon of piracy). On the other hand, there is no arbitrary remedy provided by the State.
- d) To abolish moral rights to the benefit of an opposing right, depending on the worth of the derivative creation? It remains to be proven that moral rights, in practice, freeze artistic creation. However, Mr. Smiers' idea arrives at an impasse. How can he, in effect, judge the worth of the new creation? To say that the product is "botched or boring" leads to a subjective analysis. And for a right to depend on the tastes of each leads to a new arbitrary time.
- e) Finally, it is positive that Mr. Smiers finishes his article by raising that pure and simple plagiarism should be punished. But this conclusion is equally paradoxical, because the same essence, the right of the author, is thus recognized: one admits that the creator has a right to his work.

Similarly, it is not easy to reinvent the wheel.

Toronto Children's Chorus
Jean Ashworth Bartle C.M., O.Ont.
Founder / Music Director

CONDUCTING INTERNSHIP

Founded in 1978 by Jean Ashworth Bartle, the Toronto Children's Chorus offers children ages 7-17 an exceptional artistic and educational experience through the study and performance of fine choral repertoire. The TCC is a 300-voice internationally renowned ensemble which performs, records and tours worldwide. The successful candidate will have the opportunity to study conducting and rehearsal techniques in depth and to become immersed in the TCC's inner artistic & administrative operations. This position is located in Toronto for the term of August 15, 2005 to June 30, 2006. Two half terms of August 15 to December 24 or January 9 to June 30 2006 are also possible. The conducting intern works directly with the Music Director at music camp (August 28-September 3 2005), all rehearsals (Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday) and approx. fifteen concerts, as well as on possible tours and recording projects. This position is ideally suited to a musician on sabbatical leave, who has a minimum five years' experience teaching choral music in schools and/or directing a children's community choir. If this position interests you, submit your curriculum vitae, cover letter and other pertinent data by March 1, 2005 to:

Orphei Drängar's 150th anniversary (6 Oct 2004)

Orphei Drängar celebrated its 150th anniversary throughout 2003, with a variety of activities. One of many highlights was the international male-voice choir symposium, which attracted participants from all over the world. The symposium shared an abundance of information and strengthened and widened a closely-knit international network of people and choirs. It also gave rise to a number of issues and concerns which wetted the appetite for future international meetings to be held. The discussions were documented and have now in edited format been compiled in a small booklet which can be ordered, free of charge, from cdmaster@od.se. It can also be downloaded from: www.od.se/symposium.pdf

Obituary (6 Oct 2004)

Herbert Saß passed away during the night of Saturday to Sunday 2 - 3 October. He was almost 90 years old. M Saß was the first Secretary General of the Deutsche Musikrat (1953-1979). He was also Secretary General of Europa Cantat and an individual member of the International Music Council. His contribution to the creation of the IFCM was essential. The IFCM presents its condolences to the family.

Europa Cantat Honorary President François Bourel died on 6 Oct; he was 80 years old. There was a memorial service for him at the Eglise St François Xavier (near the Invalides) in Paris on Friday, 8 Oct at 16.30h. He was buried on Saturday, 9 Oct at 10.00h in Voiron (Isère). If you would like to write to his wife and children, please address your letter to Bernadette Bourel, 145 avenue de Suffren, F-75015 Paris, France.

"... And what instrument does a violinist play?" I asked a group of more than fifty fourth graders (nine year olds). In the minutes that followed, and after collectively describing the violin, we exchanged ideas that led to the logical conclusion that the violin represented the sum of a series of smaller parts in a specific distribution, and that the violinist could only play music if the whole instrument was involved. We did a similar exercise with other instruments, and reached the same conclusion.

"...And what is a singer's instrument?" The children's hands shot up just as fast (all children want to be the first to answer after all), but here there was a noticeable difference: there were doubts, and many of the hands soon went back down again. And through a series of incomplete, right and wrong answers, we started to discover the anatomy of the singing apparatus, from the diaphragm, and the intercostal muscles to the facial cavities. We concluded that, even though there are parts of the body that are not directly involved in phonation, the singer's instrument was the entire body.

It was then that one of them said, "...well, like the violinist, to be able to make music, singers have to use their whole instrument, so they have to sing with all their body." Intuitively, the children had arrived at conclusions similar to those reached by Emile Jaques-Dalcroze in the last century.

Emile Jaques-Dalcroze (1865-1950), a composer and educator from Switzerland, was one of the first people to study the concept of musicianship. He found ways to experience the phenomenon of music in many contexts through the physical experience of the isolated elements of music. Jaques-Dalcroze understood that music, besides the auditory sense, was intimately related with the nervous and muscular systems of the entire body. He then began to experiment with physical exercises prior to lessons. His conclusions and experiences were summarized in several publications that supported what subsequently became known as Dalcroze Eurhythmics.

One of the principles of Dalcroze Eurhythmics was to make it possible to understand music through one's own ability to organize sounds. During my personal career as a conductor, I have found by experimentation that this understanding in any field (listening, singing, playing instruments or composition) can be facilitated by using our own experience of movement in relation to time, space and energy. These conclusions are similar to those of Jaques-Dalcroze who put it this way: "the musical result depends on the quantity and quality of one's own experiences of movement, and on the technical freedom that each person has to use that source of resources". It is thus natural to handle music, and especially rhythm, using the body as a musical instrument for the physical and personal experience of these elements in their dynamic roots (Aronoff, 1974).

This intimate relation between physical sensations and music is one of the fundamental principles that apparently inspired the use of eurhythmic expressions in the works of a number of composers around the world, or the inclusion of these in the renditions of certain conductors. This certainly applies to me. Personally, I consider that the musical phenomenon can achieve a greater interpretive depth if experienced with the entire body as an integral instrument. The deeper the interpretation, the better the quality of the musical result. In addition to using the entire body as an instrument through which one can experience the interpretive phenomenon of music, the movements themselves can be given an artistic quality, in many cases related to the rhetoric of the work, which in the end will become part of the communication of the music itself.

The Cantora Juvenil de Caracas in 2001

...Body Movement and Eurhythmics

J. J. G. Loots, when speaking about choral music in Africa, writes: "semantically, there is no differentiation between a dance and a song. The word for music in the Sotho language of the southern regions is bina, and this word is used indiscriminately for a song and for a dance." (Loots, 1992). In support of the above, Karmina Silec, when speaking of her work with her choir Carmina Slovenica, states that: "in our regular rehearsals, we always include movement. I find that the relation between singing and movement is extremely important in many aspects (intonation, sound production...)" (Silec, 2000).

This process of creation and re-creation of choral music is not exclusive to children and young people. Nevertheless, children and youngsters who are asked to do this in their choral practice can achieve a greater development of their motor abilities. The eurhythmic sections and the choreographic elements with which I have been able to work in choral compositions and interpretations have allowed me to develop these abilities in my choristers. The most important functions that can be developed through this practice are: (i) gross and fine motor movement: developed by means of foot tapping, clapping hands or against parts of the body, finger snapping and choreographic elements in general; (ii) laterality: developed through choreography and various eurhythmic formulas that make differential uses of the right and left limbs; (iii) the body plan and kinaesthetic memory: which involve the notion that a person has of their own body and its parts, which is fundamental to the ability to execute the great diversity of movements proposed, and; (iv) motor independence: the movement of the limbs independently from each other or from another activity such as singing.

The ways in which these abilities are included in the rendition and composition of choral repertoire are very diverse. The first connection is established during warm-ups and vocalizations at a rehearsal. Experience has shown me that if movements are included during this time, better and quicker results can be achieved. Movements can also be used to promote good rhythm and tempo. As every director knows, the normal tendency is to rush the tempo as soon as a rhythm has been established. If that rhythm is practiced with the whole body, then the tendency to accelerate will be diminished. When eurhythmic elements have been included in the score, conductors and composers can design new warm-up exercises that contain the specific difficulties of the piece. In this manner, the choristers will superimpose two processes: the warm-up and the rehearsing and resolution of specific difficulties of the work, using the rehearsal time in a more effective and efficient way.

All the sounds that are generated when striking different parts of the body or against the floor are considered body percussion sounds. The organization and the assignment of rhythms to these sounds generate the eurhythmic structures that some composers include in their works. The complexity of these structures is variable, and the smartest way to use them implies studying the natural accents of the text and the levels of tension generated by the music. Eurhythmics will be more effective and easier to learn if it is in consonance with what occurs musically. For example, a natural accent of the text (and therefore correct phrasing) will be facilitated if the weight of the word or phrase is felt by the body. Swaying forward, tapping a foot or a clap can do this. In another example, one can understand an asymmetric meter such as 5/8 more deeply and naturally if rhythmic values of a dotted quarter note (crochet) and a quarter note are assigned to alternate taps of the right and left feet.

The Cantoria Juvenil de Caracas in 2002 in Espoo, Finland (Photo: World Vision Choir, Korea)

But the use of eurhythmics is not only associated with technical elements in the musical language, but can also be very effective in the interpretation of the work. In this sense, eurhythmics can be associated with the poetic content of the text, intensifying the message that is transmitted. The use can be literal (i.e. if the text says: "...stepping...", one can incorporate a step), or not literal (i.e. if the text says: "...I hear an explosion far away...", one can incorporate a strong stamp or a clap imitating a loud noise). Hence, one can include elements of drama or theatre to intensify the meaning of the text and to create both a vocal and visual experience on stage. All these elements and the balance among them together permit the creation of choreographies and "choralographies" (a very fashionable term in the 80's and 90's that attempt to group all the body movements by members of a chorus when they stay in the same place on stage) and have greatly enriched the international choral movement.

Many artists worldwide (composers and directors alike) have been using elements like eurhythmics, body movement and drama to intensify the rendition of previously composed works or of new compositions which explicitly incorporate them. Among the artists that I know who have dedicated time to this interrelation of elements are Karmina Silec (Slovenia) and Sanna Valvanne (Finland), who are endeavouring to fuse choral music, drama, theatre and movement with their choirs. Alberto Grau (Venezuela) is a composer who has made great efforts to include eurhythmic elements in his numerous compositions. Directors trained under his example and mentorship tend to include eurhythmic and dance elements in their interpretations. This group, spearheaded by María Guinand, includes names such as Ana María Raga, Maibel Troia, María Leticia González, Luimar Arismendi and myself. Other composers like Osvaldo Golijov (Argentina) and Stephen Hatfield (Canada) include some choreographic elements and theatrical references in their works.

Finally, it is necessary to understand that the entertainment world and the arts in today's society are increasingly challenged by the presence of many tremendously attractive visual alternatives like television, film, etc. In the environment of children and young people, choirs have to compete with these alternatives (and other no less attractive ones such as sports). It is not simple to win their attention so as to get them seriously involved in the choral activities. María Guinand writes: "...the new choral repertoire will indisputably have to be brought up to date and to incorporate other elements as parts of the composition, whether choreography, lighting effects, the use of eurhythmics, etc. that will make a choral concert not only an auditory experience, but also a visual one." She continues: "To the extent that children and young people are trained to involve their whole minds and bodies in their singing activities, the experience will become more complete, choral singing will be more attractive and allow them to undertake more easily the challenging and bold repertoire of the future." (Guinand, 2002)

The artistic possibilities arising from the fusion of all the elements we have mentioned are unlimited. They provide a sure way to create original and individual interpretations and compositions. Even more, they are of unprecedented importance in the musical and integral education of the choir singers, and therefore of future societies, when introduced in the early stages of musical development.

"A skillfully organized choral symposium that defines, enhances and inspires the choral art and choral music education." - Ardelie Ries, Alberta

Application Deadline: February 1, 2005.

Join clinicians in an enriching week of master classes and seminar instruction.

Eight selected applicants will rehearse with the Toronto Children's Chorus and conduct the final concert. The seminar curriculum features conducting techniques, rehearsal strategies, creating artistry, organizational & long-range planning, score study, and repertoire search.

Arrangements by Clytus Gottwald

The sophisticated choral arrangements by Clytus Gottwald have found a place in concert life throughout the world. In his choral transcriptions Gottwald has transferred to traditional music the compositional techniques from new music which he developed during his long tenure as founder and director of the chamber choir Schola Cantorum. He makes audible the structures of the works he transcribes through the use of a finely differentiated sound.

Compositional Flow

An Interview with Stephen Paulus

"I think it is very important for you to find your musical style. That is what sets you apart, it is your signature. You cannot force it. Your musical style develops as the person evolves, as the artist evolves. Eventually you find sounds that you like better than other ones. Those are incorporated into your work and the other ones get separated out. But if you connect with whatever is in here, and feel confident about it, that becomes your signature."

-Stephen Paulus

Composer Dialogue Session - Sixth World Symposium on Choral Music
Minneapolis, Minnesota, August 2002

Kathy Romey (KR): Would you discuss your background in writing choral music?

Stephen Paulus (SP): I have been writing choral music for thirty-five years...I have always loved the voice and I love choral music; I sang in church choirs as a kid. I got started writing out of necessity for a church job. Then one of the first actual requests I had to write a piece was from Dale Warland for his college choir and that was a little bit later, 1973 or 1975.

KR: And how would you describe your music?

SP: My music is lyrical, sometimes full of kinetic energy when it goes; obviously not when it is lento. Sometimes angular-type melodic ideas. It is certainly not dodecaphonic. It is tonally based. It uses a lot of polytonality or tonality in juxtapositions that make it seem less tonal but the actual leadings are traditionally based.

...But I am an architectural composer. I think a lot about the structure of a work and the form. My method of writing is such that I am always looking at two things: the macro approach and micro approach. As I am writing a piece, I have an idea of the form it is going to take.

KR: And what is it that appeals to you about the vocal music? You have written a significant amount of choral works.

SP: I can't tell you how many choral pieces I have written but I think it is well in excess of one hundred and fifty. They range from two minutes to one hour long...what attracts me to the medium is two things - number one is the expressive quality in the voice. It is an instrument within us...You have to be sensitive to the use of the voice, how it's used, where it's used...I think that is a key thing. The other thing that attracts me is the text. I love writing instrumental music. But when you load something up with a text...now, it's got another agenda. Something else working. It's not just one thing, it's two things. With the voice you get to do that. The text that, without any music at all, is already communicating something. And the only reason you put that text to music is that somehow that musical form, which will change the form of the poem usually, that it is going to have even more meaning, be more profound. Certain phrases are going to stick out - be emphasized, and it is going to communicate even more. And that has to do with unraveling something over time. It takes much less time to read something than it does to sing it. So by singing it, we are already stretching a rubber band and saying that this little phrase I'm going to repeat is because it is important to me. Is it important to you or to anyone else? Who knows! We hope so. Otherwise, they will say, "Why did you repeat that?" Those are the things that attract me to writing for the voice.

KR: Are there specific compositional elements that dominate, or is it different with each composition?

SP: I think it varies. I am a slave to three things. One is the text. Another is the performance situation...the conductor, the ensemble, the performing space, and the particular situation. And the sound. They can come in any order, but I think basically when someone commissions a choral work, the first thing that comes to my mind is - How large is your group? Where are we doing it? What kind of text are you interested in?

Now I am a text/research person. I love that. I love putting together a couple of possibilities and offering them up to somebody... And I am also influenced by the performance situation. It goes to the point of imagining when I have been there and I know when it is happening. Hopefully I have already met the conductor and have developed some sort of rapport with that person. That is very important. They are going to be your champion. They have to sell the music to the choir.

And then the actual performance situation itself...if I know that someone is doing a piece in a particular space, and I have seen that space, like the National Cathedral [in Washington D.C.], it sort of lays the fertile ground, the first seeds, the bedrock of where the ideas are going to grow out of.

And then last, but certainly not least, and sometimes first, is the actual sound. Simultaneous to seeing the National Cathedral, I had certain sounds coming into my head about a way to start, and an idea to use a chamber choir in the back for something, and really using that space. I started to hear sounds - it just sort of happens when you see an interesting text, and know the performance situation. It is the kind of thing that hooks you. You can't really say that the text is most important, or the sound itself, or the situation. They are all out there competing for your attention at the same time, and they all converge. Sometimes people will ask, "Is it the melodic line which comes first, or the text, or harmony?" Sometimes it all happens at the same time. Like a cloud of sound and you have to figure out - this voice does this, and this voice goes there...and out of that comes this unison thing. It is all integrated in the best possible world.

KR: Would you talk about your creative process, and about the differences between writing for the voice and writing for instrumentalists.

SP: Is there any stylistic difference between writing for the voice and writing instrumentally? I would say, absolutely none, hopefully. The difference would come in either category. If you are writing for a community orchestra that meets every week or two, and most of them don't have degrees but they love to play - I would say you write your same musical style. But I would choose to make it less technically challenging and perhaps a tiny bit more accessible so they're not frustrated and say, "Why did we even commission this piece? We can't even play it!" The same thing for an amateur choral group versus a really good college or university group or professional group...it is not writing down to anyone. It is simply saying that a 2-year piano student is not going to play the same thing as a doctoral musical arts candidate can. But I would say you keep the same stylistic bent to everything, just modify it technically.

KR: Do you ever go back and make changes to a work based on the preparation process of the chorus?

SP: I would say there is usually something. I don't think it's a reflection on whether you know what you're doing or not. It's a reflection on whether it is a malleable, fluid process. This is the way composers and performers used to work all the time, and it has only been in the last 70 years that we have gotten the idea that we should know everything and that there shouldn't be any changes. That's absurd! It changes sometimes just from one setting [to another]. This hall you can hear everything. That hall is a lot muddier. So what are we going to do here? You have to be flexible. I love the fact that is not set in stone.

...And I think it's cool if the conductor is vested in the process, and they feel they have helped to give birth [to the work]. Sometimes it's their idea, or sometimes it is a collaborative thing hashed between you. It is that kind of doctoring, which is most exciting at the first set of rehearsals for a premiere. We have this golden opportunity to make it the best it can ever be. Other people are going to take it over hopefully, and say, "Well how did so-and-so do this, because I like it that way." But it doesn't have the same scintillating karma that the premiere does. I think that is what is terribly exciting to be there for the rehearsals.

KR: When you go to these rehearsals, do you have a clear vision of how your work will be interpreted?

SP: Usually. I have all the sounds in my head and then I try to anticipate how the sound is going to be in that space. I don't think I am ever surprised in a huge way. There are little surprises that come along, things that didn't work as well - some of those notes should have been tied over; there should be a lift or a breath there. Minor details, that need to be cleared up. Sometimes it is dependent upon actually hearing the music itself, rather than just hearing it in your head.

KR: And have you ever been to a premiere performance, where someone does something completely different? For example, they add an accelerando or change the tempo?

SP: Yes, that happens a lot... most of us get tempi from some sort of internal clock. It doesn't mean that everyone is the same. Tempo is the one thing I think you can't affect in a conductor. If they say, "Can I do this a little faster?" or "I inserted an accelerando here." means they feel it. If you say, "No accelerando! Take it out.": it will still happen, almost every time. And what they are telling you is, "I feel the words, the line, the melodic line, the counterpoint, whatever, is moving it along there." And if they feel it, it's like telling them, "Don't feel it. Now conduct the piece with intensity, but don't feel what you're feeling." So often, I am pretty easy on conductors when they want to go faster or slower, or they are just doing it. That's okay. You can't effect too much. You have to be fairly flexible. You're recreating. We have created. But now you are making the actual music. It doesn't exist until you rent the hall and start to make something of it. I tend to just roll with it and enjoy the different ideas.

Stephen Paulus

Stephen Paulus has been hailed as "...a bright, fluent inventor with a ready lyric gift." (The New Yorker). He has written nearly 250 works which have been performed and commissioned by such eminent ensembles as the orchestras of New York, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Los Angeles and Minnesota. His choral works have been premiered and recorded by the Robert Shaw Festival Singers, Dale Warland Singers, VocalEssence, Mormon Tabernacle Choir, L.A. Master Chorale, American Boy Choir, Westminster Choir College and countless others. A recipient of both Guggenheim and NEA Fellowships, he is also a Co-Founder of the American Composers Forum and serves as the Concert Music Representative on the ASCAP Board of Directors. His music is published by Paulus Publications and EAM Corp. For complete works information visit www.stephenpaulus.com.

Kathy Saltzman Romey is an assistant professor of choral music at the University of Minnesota and the artistic director of the Minnesota Chorale. This interview is an excerpt from a longer discussion which was part of a research project entitled "From Page to Stage - The Documentation of Ten World Premieres". The research focused on the creative process of ten internationally renowned composers who were commissioned to write new works as part of the 2002 Sixth World Symposium's offerings. Chosen for their unique styles, the featured composers came from Latin America, Canada and the USA and were in residence for the premier performances, presented by some of the world's finest choirs (E-mail: romey@umn.edu) ●

Eskil Hemberg Speaks About His Music.

Conducted by Stanley R. Wold

In May of 1985 it was my privilege to sit with Eskil Hemberg in Gothenburg, Sweden, for several hours over three days collecting information about his compositions. Having recently reviewed many pages of transcribed tapes from those meetings, I thought it might be interesting for persons who perhaps don't know too much about his music to imagine that we were able to still interview him. I would pose only a few questions; the responses are his own words from those tapes. While it is true, of course, that Eskil composed many things since that time in 1985, I believe the responses below reveal important glimpses of his thoughts and methods as a composer that remained central to his being as a composer.

Stanley R. Wold (SW): If you could identify at least a couple of formative experiences in your life as a composer, what might they be?

Eskil Hemberg (EH): My foremost impressions as a child occurred when I was a member of the Uppsala Cathedral Boys Choir for 6-7 years. The Uppsala Cathedral is a Gothic Cathedral from the 13-14th C. It is 120 meters high, 120 meters long, 7-second reverberation time--just a HUGE church. The performances of Palestrina, Hassler, Bach, and others made my whole idea about sound.

I think the first of my choral pieces that had substance is perhaps Zoo. It was first performed by the Stockholm Chamber Choir, Eric Ericson conducting. Eric studied the score very carefully--he has always been meticulously well-prepared with all new scores. He tries to do every note as well as he can do it, not telling the composer that "You are wrong on this note," but asking, "Do you want it this way or do you want it that way?" And he did such a good production of it that I grew enormously as a composer! And I said to myself, "Oh, maybe I could write another piece!" It really helped a lot.

SW: Please identify some principal ideas which you value or implement as you compose.

EH: I want the text to be communicated and very clearly... If one soul is waking up sometime because of a piece I have written, that's fine with me! I am a vocal composer partially out of my own interest for the voice and because the Swedish language is so apt for singing--Sweden has produced so many singers and is still doing so... I have always been more intrigued by the voice--I think it's richer.

What happens to me when I am inspired, and when do I get my ideas? I cannot tell you exactly because it happens in different ways. But it usually happens when I have a great flow of ideas going through my head but I am not so worn out that I cannot SELECT from among them.

I think you could describe me as eclectic. I feel very close to the Swedish composer Lars Johan Werle. I think I very often tend to write in a melodic 12-tone, a very personal use of 12-tone. I think there are many other composers--Dominick Argento is one--who's writing a melodic 12-tone, from which you can get a more expressive tune than from, say, G Major!

SW: What are some chief text sources and/or methods which you use to select those texts?

EH: One interesting example is Signposts. I put that into music because of the death of Dag Hammarskjöld [H]. All Swedes were taken by the death of H--as much as the murder of Kennedy in the States. It was very natural that I should go to H's book, Markings. I said to myself "'Markings'-it could be like marking a score--that could be a little vague." Upon asking a friend "What would you call it if you didn't call it

'Markings'?" it was suggested that 'Signposts' might work and I said "That's fine! That's very concrete, something you can touch; something that says you can go this direction, you can go that direction, and so on."

When I chose the texts, for example, for Messa d'oggi, that happened in another way. I took a Kyrie and tried to explain that with modern poetry. I tried to find a modern text that could describe or create a NEED for saying "Kyrie." So I found those texts by S. Quasimodo because he was known as a Nobel Prize winner of about that time. These 2 poems (1st and 3rd movement) made a unit AROUND the Kyrie. A couple of years later, I was asked to write a separate piece for the Oskarskyrka in Stockholm, so I wrote a Gloria. And then on a 3rd separate occasion I was asked to write a Christmas carol for a group of singers. As I was looking for a text, I went back to Hammarskjöld and found the text for the Christmas carol. By some intuition, I said "Aha! Now I have a Missa Brevis--I have a K and a G, and I have 2 texts describing the K and one text describing the G. And so, it MUST be like this!" Very soon after, we performed it that way. Signposts and Messa d'oggi have been two of the most successful pieces.

A different piece is another example of my close relation to H texts: Concerning My Negotiations With Myself-and With God. My father had just died, and I was moved and touched by the fate of my father. I wanted to do something to get out of my emotional "grip." Again, I remembered when reading through Markings, this hymn about death, "Night is drawing nigh." And also, as a choral director, I thought about the piece by Brahms, "Warum ist das Licht gegeben." So I thought I should write something like a modern equivalent of "Das kleine Requiem" of Brahms. And that was my original idea. I compiled single passages of the hymn throughout Markings. {For more about this piece, see Eskil's response to the following question.}

SW: Please provide some examples of your thought process in composition, especially as it may involve symbolism.

EH: I have parodied the Buxtehude Missa Brevis many, many times; this is one of the most well-known a capella scores in Swedish choral literature because the manuscript of that work was found by a German scholar in the University Library at Uppsala, my home town. So I have known about this work all my life and have sung it several times in different circumstances. It runs sort of as a codex for me--I refer to it as one common and well-known codex of the Gloria. An example is movement IV of the Messa d'oggi.

In Concerning..., the message from Hammerskjöld is that he's really in trouble. The chorale supports and enlightens his troublesome days from underneath, supporting the text really. At m. 22, the chorale comes from above and it stays above, so it illuminates. So it is a way to tell that "through experience and through different periods, life has become a little bit easier"--the chorale comes from above, it is more guiding, like light flooding into his life. Before the chorale was supporting, now it's the other way around.

The solo quartet, I consider, functions as a reminder, a wake-up call: "Hey there! Wake up! Night is drawing nigh! Death is at hand!" {claps hands for each phrase} "Don't sleep! Soon you're going to die! Don't sleep." So it starts very beautifully, because I wanted that kind of "very nice, beautiful" start, but then I would like some other--a wake-up call. That could come from anywhere. So in this sense, the dissonance is purposefully jarring.

And here [m. 4], all those very tight positions, is like how does it surface?--Night is drrrrawwwwing--This is the death moment! I'm trying to describe what death could be like. And this comes back again and again. Some people ask "Why have it so difficult? [m. 10] F-sharp, e, then d?" I say, "There is no other way to describe death." At m. 14 there is this "madrivalism" in that the idea of "testing between finger and thumb" is done in a very simple canon. This is a naive, childlike movement in our life. Now the text is about the struggle of life, how H is trying to find his way. In the organ pedal part is what I call the "life-walk of H," a repeated life-walk, stepping and sliding away.

Another madrigalism appears: there is in medieval Swedish church paintings the appearance of a very fanciful flower with lots of leaves and petals going in all directions (this is especially prevalent in the province of Dalarna). There is a spot in this piece very much like that kind of flower.

Sometimes people criticized Concerning that it was "just another one of those tritonicity pieces again." But then I think they really didn't listen to the message of the piece--which is NOT the trying out of tritonicity but rather "I am telling you what death is like!" But the critics didn't perceive the combination between text and setting. I think this is an eternal problem.

This is one of the first compositions where I have really a special meaning attached to every single bar that is here. The difficulty of being alive and going through the death moment: I consider this to be one of the most difficult tasks that you and I have yet to perform. I do not consider this a minor thing; I consider it the collision between reality and eternity and that I have to describe in music one way or another. And I have chosen these dissonant juxtapositions--the sounds are NOT "accidental collisions."

Stanley R. Wold is Professor of Music and Director of Choral Activities at the University of Minnesota Duluth, where he has taught choral conducting and vocal music education since 1984. His doctoral thesis at the University of Cincinnati's College-Conservatory of Music earned him the 1987 Julius Herford Award from the American Choral Directors Association. The thesis is entitled "Eskil Hemberg -- Swedish composer, choral conductor, and administrator: A survey of his works." (E-mail: swold@d.umn.edu) ●

Jean-Marie Marchal

The Play of Robin and Marion by the troubadour Adam de la Halle (ca. 1250-1306 ?) is among the most important works of medieval musical art. It appears by that title in all the history books, but no one, or almost no one, has heard this somewhat mysterious work, which combines elements of popular music, scholarly poetry and comedy. To my knowledge, until now only two recordings of this work have been made, recorded in the 1970s and 1980s. That is to say that this new arrival makes something of a sensation, all the more so because its musical execution is exemplary. Starting with a meticulous reconstruction of the work, and approaching it with a promising perspective that stems from the interpolation of complementary pieces (estampies, ronds and motets), the musicians of the Micrologus Ensemble have indeed created an exemplary work, one that respects the latest advances in musicology while preserving all the freshness and spontaneity of a score full of contrasts and feeling. The use of a collection of varied instruments to support the voices (harp, lute, bagpipe, hurdy-gurdy, pipe, percussion...) sheds new light on this famous « play » and reveals all its shimmering colors. Listening to this recording, one at last understands why this work has so touched the spirit since the time of its creation! (zigzag territoires 040602).

In view of his upcoming anniversary, artists and music lovers will soon turn their attention to one of the greatest English masters of renaissance polyphony, Thomas Tallis (C. 1505 - 1585). Who else could take the initiative for a first collection honoring the author of the famous « Spem in alium » than Peter Phillips' Tallis Scholars? Certainly there is nothing new here, since it was only a matter of pulling together a series of recordings made between 1985 and 1998 in order to publish a set of two CDs of generous length. But the competent interpretation of the English singers, with their luminous, broad, resonant tones, is always worth going out of one's way for. All genres except a mass are represented here: motets, psalms, Magnificat, anthems and others (« Lamentations of Jeremiah »). This is a fine opportunity, then, for (re)discovering every aspect of a considerable work which, together with Taverner's, is regarded as the base for the brilliant English tradition of sacred polyphonic chant (Gimell 203).

For its part, the Jachet de Mantoue Ensemble continues illustrating and promoting the work of this still largely unknown composer from Brittany, engaged by the court of the Gonzaga at Mantua. Here we have a repertory composed essentially for official functions of the court of Gonzaga, which notably includes a very curious homage... to the horses of the duke's stables (the motet Enceladi Coeique soror, subsequently parodied by Jachet de Mantoue in a mass of the same name). The program is filled out with other works by Jachet, by his Flemish colleague Adrian Willaert (working at the same period at St. Mark's in Venice) and, finally, by a work common to the two musicians, namely Nisi Dominus, a psalm for double choir. Admirably supported by the Saqueboutiers of Toulouse, the voices unfurl to provide a dense and colored interpretation that is impeccable, if at times lacking in ease and expressivity (Calliope 9342).

The enigmatic Carlo Gesualdo has left a madrigal-like work, unique in its genre, as expressive and tormented as one could desire, which very few interpreters risk taking on. The touchy temperament of the Prince of Venosa here expresses itself musically in an audacious and surprising manner, one with almost expressionistic touches. With this CD, the Kassiopeia vocal quintet launches a complete recording of this unrivaled work, beginning quite logically with the First Book of madrigals, published in 1594. The singers' performance demonstrates good dramatic engagement, but suffers from some raggedness and a lack of homogeneity made noticeable by recording the voices at close range. Despite these few reservations, this audacious adventure merits discovery and attention (Globe 5221).

Another adventure proving more and more intriguing to follow: the complete recording of the Bach cantatas by Masaaki Suzuki and his Bach Collegium of Japan. The group is already on its 24th volume, which is devoted to three cantatas based on chorales and intended to be performed on August 20 (Herr Jesu Christ, du höchstes Gut BWV 113), September 3 (Allein zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ BWV 33) and September 24 (Liebster Gott, wenn werd ich sterben BWV 8) of the year 1724. Bach's imagination once again works wonders here, in the quality and diversity with which he treats the chorale melodies -- florid and invigorating in both the vocal and instrumental lines. The knowledge of Bach's musical universe, assiduously put into practice, seems to grow stronger from one day to the next in these Japanese musicians, who achieve the right balance between the composer's mystical fervor and the sensuous beauty of his melodic writing. Suzuki's light and precise direction allows the rhetorical discourse of the "Cantor" to be expressed freely, with serenity and confidence belonging only to the great (Bis 1351).

Dietrich Buxtehude is featured in the new Carus release, in a program that seems somewhat eccentric. That is the initial impression made by this recital of sacred works, which indeed suggests a series of opuses of vocal and instrumental measurements and forms that set one another off, to say the least, as one proceeds briskly from a short sacred concerto to a festive cantata, or from a sober and « functional » Magnificat (of dubious attribution) to a short but very resonant Alleluia taken from an Easter cantata. Except for this final piece, we find a unifying thread in the fact that these works were intended to be performed during Advent and the Feast of Christmas. One finds here the quite beautiful little cantata Das neugeborne Kindelein, timely and marvelously recorded by the Ricercar Consort in a superb collection, Deutsche Barock Kantaten. For the main course, if I dare call it that, we have the cantata BuxWV 51 Ihr lieben Christen, freut euch nun, whose festive text serves as a pretext for unveiling a fairly imposing group of instruments (trumpets, horns and trombones). « The Favorites » instrumental ensemble's interpretation is consistent with current mainstream Baroque performance, with the trumpeters deserving special mention for their mastery of some tricky scores. Unfortunately, the Rastatt vocal group seems less in its element. Most certainly, its performance never truly loses our respect, but it does appear somewhat reserved in terms of color and expressivity. Nonetheless, one is left with the true pleasure of discovering these rare works by an inspired composer (Carus 83 .156).

Totally unknown by the general public, the Basque composer Juan Garcia de Salazar (1639-1710) makes his entry into the catalog thanks to the work of K617 and of Josep Cabré, who explores unremittingly this type of repertory as the head of the excellent Capilla Peñaflorida. Salazar has left only sacred music, preserved in the form of manuscripts or copies of manuscripts. The director has drawn from them a « Requiem » and psalms, put back into their liturgical context by the addition of suitable plainchant. The composer's style, essentially homophonic, is unquestionably antiquated, both technically and in its treatment of rhetorical images inferred by the text. What's left is music of good composition and unquestionable fullness, which the Spanish musicians' flawless interpretation expresses with force and conviction (K617162).

Although deeply appreciated by his contemporaries and successors, including Mozart and Schubert, Michael Haydn (1737-1806) suffered greatly because of the notoriety of his brother Joseph, undoubtedly the more inspired of the two in managing his career. The « unknown » Haydn is, however, a distinguished, elegant composer capable of becoming deeply expressive when circumstances warrant. This is quite evidently the case in his Requiem in C minor, from which emanates at times a very impressive greatness of soul as well as a surprising mastery of polyphonic writing. We are in the presence of an authentic masterpiece here, one which the interpretation by Christian Zacharias, of the Swiss Chamber Choir and Orchestra of Lausanne, shows off to best effect despite a guarded expressiveness, which lends the piece a certain solemnity at the expense of a more supple and emotional approach. The discovery is worthwhile, in any case, for the other tracks -- two symphonies by the same composer - are revealed full of freshness and radiant energy (MDG 340 1245-2).

Emotion is equally the issue in the latest recording by the Mädchenchor Hannover (director : Gudrun Schröfel), which offers a varied program, full of color and contrast, including notably Brahms' Vier Gesänge op. 17, Holst's Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda and Seven Part Songs, and other pieces either original to or arranged by Caplet, Debussy, Poulenc and Koerppen. One cannot help but appreciate the fruitiness and freshness of these girls' tone quality, showing fine choral discipline and true force of conviction, which clearly allow them to converse freely with the musicians and orchestra that accompany them. The CD is easy to listen to, in the manner of a subtly flavored journal that Gudrun Schröfel's supple and precise direction tastefully measures out. A real pleasure, which can scarcely be diminished by some slight imprecision and strained high notes. (Ars Musici 1371-2).

Composed in 1938, shortly after Jeanne au Bûcher, La Danse des Morts is poignant and vehement, an unyielding work, written by Arthur Honegger on a Paul Claudel text inspired by the Bible. The work demands strong personalities capable of offering without reserve a quivering and generous dramatic commitment, while nonetheless retaining an exalted viewpoint and nobility of tone undeniably linked to its solemn Biblical aspect. From this point of view, one cannot help recalling with emotion the recording from a previous era directed by Charles Munch at the pinnacle of his glory. The new recording under the direction of Edmon Colomer (Choir of Radio France, Orchestra of Picardy) does not completely succeed in equaling that historical success, despite its undeniable qualities, foremost among which is the choir's fine performance, always precise and vigorous. The relative disappointment stems principally from the solo performances which, while meritorious, pale in comparison with their glorious predecessors'. Nor can the solo work of Lambert Wilson rival that of Jean-Louis Barrault, who completely inhabited the role. Overall, this interpretation holds some trump cards, and never loses our good will, but it does not truly succeed in rising to a level where it could be considered modern discography's reference version for this atypical and demanding work (Calliope 9526).

There are few recorded witnesses to the presumed symphonic talents of the British composer Cyril Scott (1879-1970). The CD that Chandos publishes today will set the record straight on that score! The orchestral writing of the « sea poem » Neptune (1933-1935, a period which includes the tragic adventure of the Titanic) and of the Symphony Number 3 (with choir - 1937) indeed reveals a magician of instrumental effects and colors, which at times are fluid and elegiac in the Debussy manner, at others robust and powerful in the manner of the better Vaughan-Williams. A hearing of this CD appears as quite a revelation, the interpretation by Martyn Brabbins (at the head of the Huddersfield Choral Society and the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra) being perfect in style, precision and dramatic intensity. Absolutely to be discovered! (Chandos 10211).

Globe is featuring Krzysztof Penderecki in a selection of a cappella sacred works interpreted masterfully by Tõnu Kaljuste and the Netherlands Chamber Choir. The program pays homage to the best of the Polish composer's choral inspiration during the 1980's and 1990's : Agnus Dei, Song of Cherubim, Veni Creator, Miserere, etc. Only two earlier works are included in this recital: the Stabat Mater from 1962 and In puerem mortis (1966). One can here appreciate writing that finds its rightful place between tradition and modernism, already sounding « classical » to today's listener, in the noble sense of the term. The Dutch singers' performance does full justice to this quality repertory, rich in authentic and captivating expressivity. Nice workmanship! (Globe 5207).

Let us end this column by acknowledging the appearance of two recordings dedicated to one of the most active of the new-generation Belgian composers: Kurt Bikkembergs. Composer and choir master, he knows particularly well « the choral instrument », for which he writes subtle and refined scores, which once again find a balance between tradition and modernity, with touches reminiscent of Vic Nees. The first of these two CDs (« Sacred Works ») proposes a series of sacred works for a cappella choir or with organ, written between 1996 and 2002, whose natural expressiveness should win the composer a large international audience. The second is dedicated entirely to a Passion cantata entitled Debarim, whose text (primarily in Dutch) does not follow the gospel, but rather is inspired by both Genesis and the Book of Revelation, and even by medieval mystical literature. The same diversity is found on the musical level, which notably includes borrowings from jazz and a recourse to spoken texts, all the while preserving an essentially tonal context. The interpretation, entrusted to the composer's own vocal ensemble (Capella di Voce), is praiseworthy from start to finish (contact: wendel.vanesser@skynet.be - scores via Euprint : www.euprint.be).

Superscope's PSD300 CD Recording System lets you:

Record your choral groups and soloists directly to CD. As they sing along to any music CD, easily change the key of a song in half steps as much as an octave. Use with your split-track CDs. Digital Vocal Reduction can reduce the lead vocal on many stereo recordings. Record custom accompaniment CDs in their key for sopranos, altos, tenors, bassists and soloists.

Collegium
— RECORDS

COMING FEBRUARY 2004

Among present-day musicians, there can be few more versatile than Sir Richard Rodney Bennett, and none better at everything he does: composing for concerts and films, playing the piano in contemporary music and in jazz idioms, singing and playing classic show tunes in cabaret. This long-awaited meeting of the most versatile musical minds of their generation has FINALLY been captured on CD!

For listeners unfamiliar with Bennett's work, this CD will be an excellent place to start – his superbly crafted, highly accessible music will appeal to collectors of choral music, 20th century English composers and even movie soundtracks

This SACD Hybrid Disc will play on all standard CD players but will reveal its full sonic glory on SACD playback equipment
