Choral Singing in Brazil

Introduction

As Carvalho mentioned in a previous Dossier on Brazilian choral singing¹, the large area of the country, the profound mixture of influences that come together to construct Brazilian culture (African, European and Indigenous Indian), and the diversity of musical styles make it nearly impossible to make any general statements regarding the country's choral music. This article is, therefore, focused on five different aspects of choral life in Brazil and explores some of its peculiar aspects, in the words of music teachers, musicologists and choral directors, who touch on historical aspects of 20th-century music, the country's public education agenda, youth choirs, choral arrangements and company choirs. Other important activities, such as community choirs, composers and choral festivals are left out of this article due to lack of space.

Orpheonic Singing² in Brazil until Villa-Lobos

Flavio Silva

The first attempts to establish music-making as a systematic activity in Brazilian schools seem to have been made by Barão de Macaúbas during the second half of the nineteenth century. In 1856 he wrote: “Nobody, nowadays, is unaware of music’s benefits in improving behaviors, making hearts more sensible, activating emotions and exalting patriotic feelings.” In 1888 he expressed the desire that “music was included among the required disciplines in the country’s elementary schools.”

In São Paulo, at the beginning of the twentieth century, we find the first attempts at well-organized polyphonic collective singing activity, with or without instrumental accompaniment, a fact owed to João Gomes Junior and João Batista Julião. In 1921, local government authorized the *Escolas Normais*³ to organize “orpheonic rehearsals” (Fuks: 100). Fabiano Lozano organized, in the city of Piracicaba, the Orfeão Piracicabano, which made several recordings and toured to Rio de Janeiro in 1925. In Pelotas, in the state of Rio Grande do Sul, Antonio Leal Sá Pereira prepared a 4-part version of the National Anthem, which was sung by the “Coro dos Mil” (Choir of the One Thousand) at the festivities celebrating the centenary of Brazil’s independence in 1922.

In Rio de Janeiro the foundation of a “Grande Coral Brasileiro” (Great Brazilian Choir) was suggested in 1882, but the idea does not seem to have caught on. In October 1926 the “Sociedade Coral Brasileira” made its debut, conducted by Luiz Marisa Smido, Bento Mossusunga and Eduardo Souto, on which regard the Revista Musical stated: “It is astonishing that an institution such as this hadn’t been established yet in Brazil.”

According to Rosa Fuks, in 1929 a committee constituted of Brazilian musicians and teachers such as Francisco Braga, Sylvio Salema and Eulina de Nazareth, was installed “to develop a music program [dedicated] to the educational establishments of the Brazilian capital [Rio de Janeiro, at that time] [...] through choral singing and instrumental practice, both individually and collectively, a plan published in 1930” (Fuks: 114). But the bibliography she mentions does not make references to texts published after March 1930, in the Weco and Ilustração Musical periodicals, in which Luciano Gallet and, even more, Lorenzo Fernandez criticized the decline of Brazilian musical life due to the propagation of poor quality materials, for which they held responsible the wide distribution of recorded music, radio stations and even printed music editions. Orpheonic singing in schools was introduced then as the solution to this problem. These articles made a considerable impact in Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo. In March 1931, Lorenzo Fernandez published the detailed study “Choral Singing in Schools”, based on the premise that “it is necessary, before anything else, to train the classroom teachers appropriately.”

It has not yet been possible to find connections between the 1929 committee cited above and the criticisms made by Gallet and Fernandez, and between the publication of the 1930 plan (which bears no exact date) and the article “To React”, which Gallet published in March of that year.

Villa-Lobos comes on stage

It is well known that Villa-Lobos attended some remarkable choral concerts in Weimar and Barcelona during his second European tour. It is also likely that he got acquainted with the great French choral movement⁴, through his contact with conductor Robert Siohan. Upon his return in the summer of 1930, he went to São Paulo. Available information indicates that his aim was to accumulate as much money as possible to enable him to return to Europe and continue his career as an artistic creator; “In the composer’s documents and statements until [the beginning] of 1932, there aren’t any hints of a desire to take over his role as an educator” (Guérios: 240).

Evidence suggests that in the second semester of 1930, the composer presented a musical education plan to Julio Prestes, then the country's president (he was deposed by a revolutionary coup d'état in October of that same year). This plan is possibly the one criticized by the periodical Ilustração Musical in February 1931, for it foresees “the officialization of national musical life [... and ...] prohibits the importation of foreign music [or requesting] its reduction to at least 50%.” This plan also stated that “the study of Brazilian music should be complete, starting with harmony; it should also include rhythm, melody, and counterpoint, until reaching the discussion of ethnicity and even the philosophical foundations that characterize it.” Less than two years after the composer took over the lead of the Brazilian choral movement, he abandoned these ideas.

João Alberto, a great lover of music, Interventor⁵ in São Paulo from November 1930 through June 1931, played an essential role in Villa-Lobos's decision to stay in Brazil for longer. The information about the beginnings of their relationship is contradictory, but we owe to him the series of concerts Villa-Lobos gave, alongside other musicians, in several cities of São Paulo state between January and April 1931. Immediately after this, the composer proposed to the Interventor a great civic musical show – “The Villa-Lobos Civic Exhortation”, which was staged the following May and involved approximately 15 000 choral singers and band instrumentalists, a prelude to the great choral gatherings that took place in Rio de Janeiro after 1932.

Villa-Lobos returned to Rio de Janeiro at the end of 1931. In February 1932 the “Serviço Técnico e Administrativo de Música e Canto Orfeônico” (Technical and Administrative Service for Music and Orpheonic Singing), was created, and in the same month a document sent by the composer to Brazilian president Getúlio Vargas was published. In it, Villa-Lobos explained the difficulties faced by Brazilian musical activities. A few days later Villa-Lobos was invited by Anísio Teixeira to preside over that service. It is not impossible that it was João Alberto who suggested the composer's name for that position. But it is certain that no-one else at the time would have had the expertise and the zeal to gather together the right personnel in order to, in such short time, reach such impressive results. In that position, Villa-Lobos no longer felt the urge to return to Paris, and, for the first time, ceased to depend on private sponsors and concert-giving to make a living. It was about time: at the end of 1932 he would complete 45 years of an errant life.

Elza's Recipe (or "The FUNARTE Panels for Choral Conducting")

Samuel Kerr

The Choral Panels were a "magic" solution invented by Elza Lakschevitz when coordinating FUNARTE's⁶ Projeto Villalobos. Through this series of events, in the 1980s, the Foundation intended to support Brazilian choirs and, in order to get acquainted with their needs, dreams and aspirations, Mrs Lakschevitz invited choral directors and singers to a meeting she named "The FUNARTE Panels", an opportunity to float ideas, a space to share musical works, a place for reflection, where matters that interested the choral community would be discussed by Brazilian musical leaders.

It was a stunning success. Ten sessions of the Panels took place between 1981 and 1993, stimulating the work of choral directors from all Brazilian states, in an effort that kept Brazilian choral music so lively for a long time even after the meetings ceased. So significant was this movement that Mrs Lakschevitz's initial gesture, supported by composer Edino Krieger and music educator Valeria Peixoto, started a new series in 2007 through the initiative of Eduardo Lakschevitz and the support of music educator Maria José Queiróz and musicologist Flavio Silva, which revived, in full flavor, Elza's "recipe".

But what did this recipe consist of?

Quite simple. Get together the country's choral leadership to talk and discuss; then ask what matters should be discussed, exchanging information, always opening new spaces and shifting the focus of attention away from the large cities, attempting to reach the country as a whole. Great seasoning! An annual meeting, which became an event eagerly expected, awaited ... and it tasted really good.

This was before the internet came along, and the Panel meetings offered a unique opportunity for learning about singing techniques, choral repertory, new arrangements, rehearsal procedures and programming. As soon as registration opened, by telephone, telegram, telex machine and letter (I insist, there was no internet), places would be taken up very quickly.

The first session of the Panels took place in Rio de Janeiro in 1981, and the last one of that series in São Paulo, at USP⁷, in 1993, after cities such as Brasília, Nova Friburgo, Vitória, Cuiabá, Londrina e Goiânia had hosted it. One year's success would determine the direction the next one would take, however, always with Elza's care in listening to what participants had to say and to suggest. In between the sessions of the Panel there were more experimental conducting courses and choral laboratories, where all ideas were tried out.

The recipe was constantly being reinvented, and Elza made sure not to dismiss certain important spices: prominent figures in Brazilian choral music would deliver speeches, teach courses and master-classes, or just take part in the meetings, sitting side by side with unknown singers or directors, fascinated by the camaraderie with people he/she knew only from their work and career, books written or by halls or auditoriums that had been named for them: among these people were Cleofe Person de Mattos, Nelson Mathias, José Vieira Brandão, Orlando Leite as well as many others, the mention of whom would exceed the scope of this article.

The recipe also included ingredients with made-up names, such as Sargento (the sergeant), Corão (the big choir), and Corel (the choral clothes line).

For each session a coordinator would be designated to take on the hardest job: trying to make everything happen on time! Oh! How difficult it was to cut short heated discussions, to interrupt a most interesting workshop, or to tell the Big Choir director that he/she had only five minutes of rehearsal time left! It was not easy for this coordinator, who was usually perceived as a rigid and unfriendly character and promptly compared to a sergeant trying to maintain discipline – There comes the sergeant to cut off our emotions!

Corão (Big Choir) was the great choral assembly. All participants, singers, directors would find themselves in the same ranks, under a colleague's baton, developing a repertory to be presented at the end of that Panel session. If the works sung in each session of the "Big Choir" had been published, they would have now made a great anthology. There were premières of original choral compositions and arrangements, written for, or dedicated to the Panels. Also, works that were otherwise rarely performed had their chances there, since it was fascinating for the director to have the opportunity to work with such a large and well-intentioned choir, and one with such good sight-reading skills! Even

8 more usefully, the work of the big choir was also assisted by a voice teacher, Lúcia Passos, a pioneer at the time in embracing choral singing as her area of expertise. I recall her care in organizing the warm-up period right down to the detail of ending it in the key of the first song to be rehearsed by the director. I also recall the solutions for vocal issues she would come up with, all through rehearsals.

A lot of subjects, some difficult and even quite painful, experienced by directors and their choirs, were presented in those meetings, or in informal conversations. They ranged from labor contracts, rehearsal time for company choirs and difficulties in the recruitment of male voices, to copyright laws for public performances, recordings and score publishing, then an new topic of discussion in Brazil. Copyright issues were emerging during that time because it was a very difficult task to convince publishing companies to distribute choral works, as it was inconceivable having to pay composers' copyrights for MPB⁸ songs arranged and performed in concerts admission to which was nearly always free. Actually these were not new subjects, yet matters that needed new approaches.

Due to these still unsolved issues, all directors wanted photocopied arrangements of works still in manuscript format, because it would be hard to exchange repertory in any other venue. To facilitate this process, the "Cordel" was installed (a combination of "cordel", "coral", and "varal"⁹). Yes, really, several clothes-lines were set up, where choral scores were exhibited to directors who would then order photocopies! But should we be reminded of this just now? I think so. Besides pointing out the mistake of photocopying, we must show the appropriateness of that practice that moment in time. The Panels propagated to the whole country the several and varied choral experiences of the different states. They made it possible for the Cordel's voice to be heard everywhere. A voice in the Cordel would be multiplied by thousands of other singers!

Elza's recipe also demanded a careful preparation of the oven, before any ingredients would be mixed together.

Yes, a long time before each session of the Panels, she would invite several choral directors to FUNARTE's headquarters, in Rio de Janeiro, to analyze the program, choose the workshops, read letters and evaluation forms from previous Panel session participants. She would request suggestions regarding repertory that could fulfill the needs of choirs from all Brazilian states and regions. I recall taking part in this consulting process, together with the late conductors José Pedro Boéssio, Juan Serrano and Oscar Zander. It is good being able to remember them - and also to remember the late Marcos Leite. In 1985, the "Big Choir" sang a jingle he created for the Panels: Friburgo hosts choral music in the 5th. National Panel/ Music, musicians/Magic, magicians/There is sound in the air ... Halleluia!

Samuel Kerr has made his musical career in the field of vocal music, as a choral director, arranger, organist and teacher. He has directed, among others, the Coral Paulistano do Teatro Municipal de São Paulo, the São Paulo State University Choirs, which he founded, the Cia Coral, the Cantum Nobile Choral Association, the Medical Students Choir at the Santa Casa Hospital, the Madrigal Psychopharmacom, and several other ensembles. He has also been the director of São Paulo's Municipal Music School and main conductor of São Paulo's Municipal Youth Orchestra.

Company Choirs

Eduardo Lakschevitz

In Brazil, the corporate world hosts an active choral life. A large number of companies, of different sizes, both public and private, sponsor choirs in which their employees take part as singers. Such activity is viewed as a moment of relaxation amidst a stressful day's work, which benefits both employers and employees. Besides this fact, however, other aspects presented in choral music are considered by human resources analysts as being very similar to modern practices of corporative governance, such as the view of a choir as a group of people working together to accomplish a common goal. The choir rehearsal is pictured as an occasion where the usual corporate hierarchy fades into the background (in many companies managers and directors sing side by side with factory workers, aiming at a perfect blend of their voices), as an experience of team-work, and as an activity that, at the same time, requires flexibility from its participants and aptitude to consider the goals of the whole team. Companies are also motivated to sponsor employee-based choirs with an eye to creating or reinforcing a reputation for being an institution that works to supply social needs of the local community through culture endeavors.

Petrobrás (Petróleo Brasileiro SA), one of Brazilian largest conglomerates, is a pioneer in making a choir available to its workers. According to José Machado Neto, general coordinator of the company's choral program, their first group was established in a oil plant in 1964. Today Petrobrás' Institutional Communications Department runs 32 choirs, spread through its facilities all over the country. "Choral singing is a solid part of the company's own culture, which involves both active and retired workers," Machado Neto says. "Our biennial choral festival, where all groups get together in a large theater, is a prestigious event within the company."

Brazilian company choirs offer a significant amount of work opportunities for choral directors. These musicians, however, face quite idiosyncratic situations. Often there isn't enough rehearsal time (but that's OK. Don't all of us choral directors always want more rehearsal time?). Practice rooms are seldom ideal, and the choir frequently has to compete for space with business meetings. Singers are volunteers and usually not auditioned, an important factor to be considered, since the lack of music education in Brazilian schools for decades makes the company choir the first choral experience ever for many of the participants. Also, since the choir isn't the core activity at the company, frequently singers miss rehearsals due to job-related tasks.

As contemporary corporations are driven by the pursuit of profit and results, and most of the time they expect the same attitude from the choirs they sponsor, the director needs to find ways to make the group work musically, while coping with the aspects described above. One's flexibility in doing so can affect conducting gestures (inexperienced singers don't usually understand traditional measure-beating patterns), and rehearsal techniques (sight-reading skills are absent, rehearsal time is scanty and song-teaching has to be very effective). Also, the vocal style of the singers is often similar to the one they regularly hear (usually urban popular songs), which is a very long way from the Bel-canto style. Although healthy vocal procedures are constantly sought after by directors in rehearsal, the production of what is usually considered a standard Western choral tone leaves space for vocal sounds better in tune with local contemporary culture, in which popular songs significantly outnumber the traditional classical repertory.

This trend can also be observed in the repertory choices made by directors, most commonly based on arrangements of Brazilian popular tunes. Indeed, these choices are crucial in the development of a company choir, for the group's volunteer character, and the continuity of the singers' participation in it, depends heavily on how the members relate affectively to the whole project, a process in which their connection with the songs they sing is crucial.

The improper balance of voices (usually many more ladies than gentlemen are involved), and the non-auditioned character of a company choir require a constant re-arranging and adapting of songs. A cappella singing is less common than the use of harmonic accompaniment, played mostly on electronic keyboards or acoustic guitars, since it facilitates the teaching and memorizing of the repertory. Instrumentalists in these groups are often experienced in popular music, for their duties also require musical flexibility, a feature they usually display in their regular gigs. Even more important than sight-reading skills is the instrumentalist's ability to understand harmony, texture, and 10 rehearsal timing. At a time when company choirs attract directors and music teachers as a work opportunity, the competencies and skills required for the job are not usually dealt with in regular undergraduate and graduate choral programs. As a consequence these have been among the most frequently discussed issues in recent short-term courses and workshops for choral conducting around the country.

Although a few theses and dissertations have been dedicated to company choirs in the past years¹⁰, we are still waiting for a thorough quantitative research into this form of choral music, a work that, when pursued, promises to deliver important findings for the benefit of the art of choral singing.

Dr. Eduardo Lakschevitz teaches History of Music at the Federal University of the State of Rio de Janeiro (UNIRIO). He holds a Doctorate in Music Education from the same institution, and a Master's degree in Choral Conducting from the University of Missouri-Kansas City (UMKC). A frequent guest teacher in Brazil and the United States, Dr. Lakschevitz has recently taught at Syracuse University and Westminster Choir College. He has developed corporate training programs through choral music in major Brazilian companies, in areas such as services, communications and education. He also serves as the pedagogical coordinator for choral music at FUNARTE (National Arts Foundation). His compositions and arrangements are published by Alliance Music and Colla-Voce. Choral Arrangements of Brazilian Popular Music

Eduardo Fernandes

Arrangements of popular tunes are, nowadays, an essential part of Brazilian choirs' repertory, but one that hasn't been receiving enough attention from scholarly research. The musical and cultural importance of the works produced (scores) and the people who write them are yet to receive proper recognition.

The arranging of popular tunes is an awkward grey area, since it has its origins in a mass production medium (connected to the idea of cultural industry), while at the same time making use of a classical expression vehicle (high culture), the choral ensemble. Such hybridism on the one hand opens up to the arrangement the privilege of involvement with two important streams of contemporary culture, and on the other bears the curse of not being accepted by either of these sides.

A bit of history

The late 1960s represented an important historical moment for Brazilian popular music production. The success of the Song Festivals promoted by several TV stations, which attracted the attention of great sections of the population, from the middle-classes through to the politically aware university students, brought mass culture and high culture closer together, represented here by young composers connected to universities. Besides, the political situation was delicate – there was a military dictatorship governing the country – and the questioning of established social values was of great significance to the agenda of these intellectualized young people.

In such a turbulent environment, taking part in a choir was one of the few ways open to these youngsters to spend time together, to feel part of a group. However, Western traditional repertory (represented by both European music and traditional-sounding Brazilian folk-music arrangements) found itself distant from the urban reality and young people's aspirations at the time.

UNIFESP Choir, directed by Eduardo Fernandes, in the show "A Era do Rádio"

During this time the arrangements by Damiano Cozzela started to be performed and promoted more methodically, by the CORALUSP (University of São Paulo Choir). The rise of urban popular music arrangements for choirs, then, came to bring the choral experience closer to the young people's regular daily lives, since participants started to sing in their groups the same songs they would listen to on the radio and television.

Nevertheless, this integration was not peaceful, for the classical music world's criticism dealt harshly with this new style of choral music, and with the directors who were working with it. Maestro Benito Juarez reports that in a particular CORALUSP concert which he directed at São Paulo's Municipal Theater (home of one of the city's symphony orchestras), performing a mixed repertory (traditional Western music and arranged popular songs), part of the audience wore black, stating their "mourning for the death of serious concert music".

The adoption of this repertory made an impact that extended beyond purely musical and technical issues. It forced choirs to search for a way of developing performance practices that reflected more accurately the music being sung, leading some groups to create a less formal and more theatrical presentation of their work, the embryonic version of a style that came to be called coro cênico (scenic choir¹¹), at the hands of a medical school choir (Coral da Faculdade de Medicina da Santa Casa de São Paulo, directed by Samuel Kerr), and later on by the work of an English language school choir in Rio de Janeiro (Coral da Cultura Inglesa, directed by Marcos Leite).

The choir, a space for diversity

With the exception of some choirs that are formed by people sharing a particular profile (age, ethnicity, religion and other criteria), most amateur choral ensembles bring together singers of varied ages, as well as social, cultural, and economic levels, a fact that confers to a choir a vast range of cultural and aesthetic references which most certainly will be reflected in the group's style of singing, repertory choice and attitude on stage. Therefore it is valid to affirm that not only does the popular music arrangement bear the hybrid character mentioned above, but amateur choral activity as a whole is immersed in this specificity, a fact that can be observed in its physical constitution (the singers), performances practices, and the final presented product.

The vocal issue

Specific repertory needs particular solutions. A choral group that usually performs opera choruses won't necessarily have the same results when singing popular songs, or folkloric ones, in spite of all its technical skills. It is essential to understand that each kind of music style has its idiosyncrasies and the vocal techniques employed should aim at reflecting the sound quality expected for each different kind of music style.

Marcos Leite summarizes the issue precisely:

When voice students look for basic knowledge, it is quite common that they take lessons with singers that teach in the lyric style, which is great, as long as vocal technique isn't confused with aesthetic purpose, with a manner of singing that belongs to other repertoires. [...] at this moment one can perceive a severe misunderstanding by singers who, unaware of these issues, sing Brazilian music using the bel-canto sound.¹²

This kind of confusion can be linked to the training of choral directors (and also vocal coaches), still mainly classical, based in the European tradition. The few books on choral conducting published in Brazil make almost no references to the direction of urban popular music in a choral setting. The establishment of undergraduate courses in Brazilian Popular Music is still very recent, but these promise to be fair mediators between the two traditions mentioned in this article. Also, the great majority of vocal coaches that work with choral singers have studied according to the bel-canto tradition, which therefore makes a very large number of choirs pursue a sound quality that bears no resemblance with the original Brazilian popular music sonority. Some books published in the last years, such as Leite's and Goulart and Cooper's¹³, musicians active both in the popular and the classical fields, are very welcome, for they are starting to fill this gap.

...Choral Singing in Brazil

12 MPB arrangements, one more possibility

The choral arrangement of popular tunes represents a rich aesthetic experience for choral singers, since it offers information that already belongs to their vocabulary (the original song) and at the same time opens a new horizon of possibilities through the multi-voice re-elaboration of that song. The same holds true for audiences who discover new ways of hearing, perceiving and understanding a previously known song.

A good arrangement can easily carry the same structural complexity as does an original composition, since the composers/arrangers are able to employ several compositional resources in their quest to bring new ideas to the original tune. Moreover, the Brazilian popular song is reputedly one of the world's most interesting and complex ones, both in its music and its lyrics, which makes its use as a source of inspiration for musical re-creation a natural and intelligent move.

Eduardo Fernandes teaches choral conducting at the UNIFIAM/FAAM, and directs the CORALUSP XI de Agosto, the UNIFESP Choir and the Fine Arts University Center Choir. He holds a Master's Degree in Music (São Paulo University), awarded for a dissertation on "Vocal arrangements of popular music in São Paulo and Buenos Aires", and a Bachelor's Degree in Performance – bassoon (University of Campinas). Mr. Fernandes has been invited as a guest teacher at several courses throughout Brazil, including: Laboratório Coral de Itajubá, Fórum Rio a Cappella de Música Vocal and Painel FUNARTE de Música Coral. His main area of research focuses on the applications of body percussion sounds and movements on choral singing. E-mail: dufer@terra.com.br

Youth Choirs in Brazil¹⁴

Patricia Costa

Although choral music is a great educational instrument for any age group (quite apart from its obvious role as an effective aid to music education), it is still an activity devoid of appeal to most Brazilian teenagers. The prejudice behind the word “choral”, perceived in research recently concluded, was confirmed by authors, choral directors and by the young singers themselves.

In this research, the use of choral music as an educational tool was the argument to support the idea of including this musical practice in the high-school curriculum. However, the answers also suggested very clearly an urge to a more specific approach in the training choral directors receive, so as to allow them to understand more fully the particular issues of a school choir.

The idea of approaching conductors through semi-structured interviews was an important decision in order to start closing the gap caused by the lack of published materials on Brazilian high-school choral activities. Besides, this dissertation started to compensate for the poor communications and lack of exchange of experiences among directors of youth choirs, also mentioned by the majority of those who responded to the questionnaire.

Judging by the small number of responses, it is clear that there is so far little scholarly expertise in this field in Brazil. Likewise, the difficulties experienced by students who took part in this project in finding choral directors working specifically with teenagers, shed some light on the very small number of choral groups catering for this particular age-group, as had been suspected even before the beginning of the survey.

With the use of these answers, it was possible to confirm some aspects observed in my own experience as a choral teacher, such as:

1. The training of a choral director and that of an educator bear a close relationship, for the great majority of directors have music education degrees.
2. The main reference for choral directors in Rio de Janeiro is Professor Carlos Alberto Figueiredo.
3. Most directors are not usually members of choral associations or similar groups.
4. A large number of directors take part in short-term courses and workshops throughout the year, which points to a need to complement and update their training in the regular school curricula.
5. Choral music is not always respected by the directors’ peers. Answers often mentioned prejudice, jealousy, and even indifference regarding it.
6. Problems related to vocal malfunction were mentioned by a large number of directors. All of these, however, usually look immediately for medical treatment, when in this situation.
7. The average age of the youth choirs researched varied, attesting to the difficulty of establishing cut-off ages between children’s and youth choirs. Some answers also showed a mix-up between the concepts of “children” and “teenagers”, which sometimes seemed to denote the same idea, a fact that created the “infanto-juvenil”¹⁵ choirs, a discussion of which would exceed the scope of the research.
8. With the exception of church groups, there is a significant drop-out rate in youth choirs when compared to ensembles of other ages.
9. The singers’ high attendance level at rehearsals suggests their efforts and pleasure in taking part in such activity.
10. High-school music directors need to plan their activities very carefully, respecting periods of exams, vacations, public holidays and all other aspects of the school calendar.
11. Brazilian Popular Music is the repertory adopted by most of the choirs researched, in which case singers usually suggest the songs to be used.
12. Most of the time the choral arrangements for those songs are written by the directors themselves, who have acquired this skill empirically or through short-term courses, which shows that either the presently existent repertory isn’t really suitable for youth choirs, or that there is an urgent need for innovation in the music regularly offered to these groups.
13. The goals and objectives of these choirs often touch upon non-musical aspects, such as evangelization, promotion of the sponsor institution, as well as social and pedagogical aspects, the latter the most frequently cited one.

14. Establishing an aesthetic conception of the groups doesn't figure as an important issue. Indeed, most of the interviewees got confused with that idea. Some, however, related it to the choir's sound quality. Through these respondents it was possible to establish a clearly marked dichotomy between the "traditional choir" (sings Western traditional repertory) and the "popular choir" (sings popular song arrangements).
15. Collective creation procedures were attested to by many youth choir directors, although very seldom mentioned by directors of other choirs.
16. A good proportion of the directors adopts, or at least considers adopting, scenic resources in their work.
17. Regarding complaints about youth choir activities, the answers produced were common among many of the directors: lack of investment, lack of discipline, and irregular attendance at rehearsals. It can also be observed that many directors expect from their singers a behavior similar to that expected from adults, suggesting, again, that their training should also consider how to deal with this particular age group.
18. The major satisfaction mentioned by choral directors is connected to non-musical issues, such as their joy, energy, will, vivacity, and creativity within their work, alongside their new discoveries and acquired knowledge about transformations inherent to the adolescent age.
19. The way a director views the teenage singer also brought significant answers concerning the non-musical aspects of their teaching already mentioned above.

Among the gains listed are the development of workgroup skills, improved self-expression, increased sensitivity, the ability to fight prejudice and to face challenges, as well as the possibility of leading a better life in future.

The vast majority of Brazilian youth choirs adopts accompanied repertory, mainly with the piano. But the fact that a cappella singing is so scarce can interfere with the general musical development of these ensembles, as the insistence on instrumental harmonic accompaniment can create a dependent attitude in the singer, diminishing his/her awareness of tuning, individually as well as in relation to the other singers.

Although belonging "only" to the popular music realm, the large-scale production of choral arrangements of these songs contributes to a revival of choral activity, attracting teenagers to – or, at least, not repelling them from – collective singing.

Scenic and theatrical exercises were mentioned as one of the instruments used to involve youngsters more closely in choral activity. In a moment of self-discovery, the insertion of exercises that put teenagers in touch with the expressive possibilities of their bodies proves to be a powerful resource to their development as singers.

Finally, the research analyzed elements that might fit a choral program and, at the same time, awaken the urban teenager's interest towards expressive choral work. It was shown that the scenic apparatus also promotes a more profound relationship between singers and the interpretation of the repertory proposed, either by the detailed study of the poetry in each piece, or by the scenic environment created, and even by means of physical awareness as an aid to perceiving more accurately the group's musical propositions.

*Choral director, arranger and scenic director, Patricia Costa holds a Music Education Degree (1996) and a Master's Degree (2009) in Music Education, from the Federal University of the State of Rio de Janeiro (UNIRIO), for research into different conducting approaches to youth choirs. Author of several articles on the same topic, Mrs. Costa directs the choral programs in two schools: Colégio Cruzeiro and São Vicente de Paulo, a choir which, under her direction, won the First Prize at the II FUNARTE National Choral Contest in 1999. ²Orpheonic singing originated in France in the early nineteenth century: large choral groups whose membership was drawn primarily from the underprivileged sections of the population. Brazil took over this movement, applying it to schools, whose efforts would often culminate in major festivals where many such groups met to sing in enormous choirs.

In Memoriam Willi Gohl 1925-2010

In Memoriam Willi Gohl 1925-2010 .

Jutta Tagger

Former Managing Editor of the ICB

In Willi Gohl the world has lost a musician and pedagogue who shaped several generations of musicians in Switzerland, his homeland, and in Europe and the rest of the world.

His entire life was devoted to music and music education. His greatest love was choral music. But he was also an excellent pianist, and he accompanied the Zürcher Kammermusiker around the world playing the harpsichord. Among the different choirs which he conducted during his lifetime, the Zürcher Singkreis is inseparably linked to his name, as he was their conductor for more than forty years; together they gave concerts in many countries. Willi Gohl was the director of the Winterthur academy of music ("Konservatorium") for 27 years. Throughout his career he organised and directed conducting classes as well as school music and choral workshops at home and abroad.

Willi Gohl was involved in Europa Cantat from its very beginning. This organisation was set up in Geneva in 1960 and legally incorporated in 1963 under the name of European Federation of Young Choirs – EFYC. For their festivals and singing weeks he was frequently a workshop leader for large choral works. However, he will be best remembered for his unique way of conducting the Open Singing sessions for which he compiled many of the songbooks.

In a similar way he worked for the Israeli Zimriya festival for more than 20 years; he also participated many times in France's Choralies festival. He was an intermittent Board member of Europa Cantat from 1965 to 1994, and of ISME (International Society for Music Education) from 1978 to 1982.

He loved large choral works and oratorios. But he loved simple folksongs just as much and wrote many choral arrangements of these. His own compositions and texts are written like folksongs, and some of them have become part of the Swiss folksong tradition. Several generations of Swiss pupils have used songbooks containing songs or arrangements by Willi Gohl. His open-singing broadcasts by the Swiss Radio were legendary. The German-speaking world knows him as the author of the beautiful "Grosse Liederbuch" ("Big Songbook"), published in 1975 by Diogenes with illustrations by Tomi Ungerer.

Bringing people together was most important to him, and choral singing was for him a fantastic tool in this respect. As early as 1972 he participated with his choir in the International Choral Festival at New York's Lincoln Center (organised by Jim Borge, with Robert Shaw as musical director), the aim of which was to promote peace and international understanding. (This festival took place five times, and concerts were also given at Yale and Washington's Kennedy Center.)

This festival may have contributed to his strong commitment for the creation of an international choral organisation, which was finally founded in Namur (Belgium) in 1982 under the name of International Federation for Choral Music – IFCM. It was only right then that he was immediately elected to its Board, where he remained until 1996.

Willi Gohl was a member of the working group for the preparation of the First World Symposium on Choral Music held in Vienna (Austria) in 1987, to which he contributed many of his educational ideas: the "format", including workshops, master classes (in many places of the world there were, and still are, no formal choral conducting classes), the presence of some of the world's best amateur choirs as "show cases", etc., is still in use.

In 1996 Willi Gohl was the president of the jury of the UNESCO Prize for the Promotion of the Arts, which was unanimously awarded to Finland's Tapiola Choir conducted by Kari Ala Pöllänen during the 4th World Choral Symposium in Sydney (Australia).

Willi Gohl was popular and revered by many. He had a very special gift for communicating his love of music and music-making. His humane, lively and humorous nature will be remembered by all who have known him.

Willi Gohl is survived by his wife, Verena, and his five children, all of them musicians.

A concert in his memory will be held on 6 June 2010 in Winterthur. ●

VocalEssence Founder and Artistic Director Philip Brunelle named “Local Legend”

Minneapolis, (January 25, 2010) – VocalEssence (*) Founder and Artistic Director Philip Brunelle was recently honored with a “Local Legend” award at the 20th annual Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Holiday Breakfast. The sold-out event – hosted by the United Negro College Fund and the General Mills Foundation – was held on Monday, January 18 at the Minneapolis Convention Center and featured the Rev. Dr. Joseph E. Lowery as keynote speaker.

Each year, the annual holiday breakfast includes the presentation of Local Legend awards, honoring those with a legacy of service who have dedicated themselves to helping others, while illustrating Dr. King’s commitment to nonviolent social change.

Philip Brunelle, conductor, choral scholar and performer, has devoted his career to sharing the rich history of wonderful, yet undiscovered, choral music. Under his leadership 20 years ago, VocalEssence launched WITNESS, an initiative that celebrates the contributions of African Americans to American heritage through concerts, recordings and education. This year alone, 7,500 students in 40 schools will participate in WITNESS.

Brunelle reaches out to African American composers who benefit from encouragement and exposure, but also inspire others and serve as positive role models. Brunelle’s work reminds everyone that music knows no racial boundaries – it crosses borders, spans the centuries and touches the hearts of its listeners.

Singing is very much part of the Jewish heritage. The priests sang in the holy Temple of King Solomon in Jerusalem. We find ample existence of this ritual in the Book of Psalms. Melodic prayers, often called “Piyutim”, remain part of synagogue services up to the present day.

During the 20th Century, choral singing was the expression of the urge for national independence in many parts of the world; it likewise accompanied the Zionist movement. The early settlers in pre-state Israel revived choral singing and also encouraged the writing of new choral music. Much of this new music was influenced interestingly by Mediterranean tunes and is still happily sung at social gatherings.

The Zimriya, founded in 1952, is one of the earliest international choral gatherings, if not the very first. It was a man of great vision, Aharon Zvi Propes, who founded the Zimriya, as he did the Israel Festival and the International Harp Contest in Israel, events he presided over until his death and which continue today. Mr. Propes was familiar with large choral meetings in Riga, where he was born. He was not a musician, but realized the importance of international cultural exchanges for the old-new state of Israel.

Today the Zimriya is an international tri-annual musical event, taking place in Jerusalem on the beautiful campus of the Hebrew University on Mount Scopus. The Zimriya hosts choirs from such distant countries as Iceland and South Africa, Sweden and Korea, as well as many Israeli ensembles. A number of prominent musicians serve on the Zimriya’s International Honorary Committee; Daniel Barenboim, Lupwishi Mbuyamba, Kurt Masur, Frieder Bernius, Paul Wehrle and others.

The Zimriya has great many advantages: choirs have the rare opportunity to work with outstanding conductors and with orchestras. The choirs’ repertoire is enriched through participation in various workshops. This multicultural meeting not only enriches musically singers but helps build mutual harmonious relations between people of different backgrounds, religions and languages.

Days at the Zimriya are very full. Participants hardly have time to enjoy the breathtaking view of Jerusalem from Mount Scopus. Workshops take place mornings and afternoons and the evening programme is twofold: Open Singing and Choir to Choir Singing, an Israeli invention that gives each choir a short opportunity to present itself to a friendly yet critical audience.

The Music Committee of the Zimriya, headed by Michael Shani, has invited the conductors listed below to lead workshops on different kinds of music. None of these internationally known figures is paid, and they simply volunteer their talent and time, as does the organizing team. We must be grateful to them all.

Change at the Top of the Contemporary Music Centre Ireland ●

Eve O'Kelly will resign as Director of the Contemporary Music Centre (CMC), Ireland at the end of June 2010.

Since September 1990 she has managed the foundation and computer cataloguing of the library, now the only comprehensive collection of 20th and 21st century Irish music scores, recordings and research materials of both north and south. She also fundraised and managed a major archive transfer project to copy and catalogue some 3,500 recordings of Irish music from the 1930s to the 1980s from the sound archive of RT (Irish Radio). Continuous development of CMC's web site since 1996, particularly the use of Web 2.0 technologies, has ensured high visibility for contemporary Irish music abroad. A major digitisation project is currently under way which will see the whole of CMC's collection available online for public access.

In 2000, Eve managed CMC's move into its own building, a historic house in Dublin's cultural quarter, Temple Bar. She also initiated many other significant projects such as performance programmes and exhibits, the promotional CD series, Contemporary Music from Ireland etc. She is a board member of the International Association of Music Information Centres and CMC will host the annual conference of the Association in Dublin in June.

The Contemporary Music Centre is Ireland's national archive and promotion agency for new music, supporting and developing the work of Irish composers nationally and internationally. (www.cmc.ie).

NB: CMC provided the ICB with the dossier on Irish Choral Music published in vol. XXIV, n° 1, 1st quarter 2005. ●

24 The Argentinean choral community is awaiting with keen interest and a sense of great expectation the events that will mark the 9th World Symposium on Choral Music 2011, "Singing the World". The Symposium will take place between 3rd and 10th August 2011 in the city of Puerto Madryn, Chubut Province, Argentina.

Organised every three years by the International Federation for Choral Music, this is undoubtedly the most relevant choral event in the world. It will be held for the first time in a South American country, and this 9th symposium represents an historic opportunity for singers from many nations to meet, exchange views, approach issues and benefit from understanding other choral traditions from around the world. The symposium is moreover a valuable opportunity for personal growth and improvement.

With these convictions in mind, ADICORA – the Association of Choir Conductors of the Republic of Argentina – supports the 9TH WORLD SYMPOSIUM ON CHORAL MUSIC 2011 and trusts that the sense mutual cooperation established in August 2006, when the World Assembly of Associations of Choir Conductors organised by ADICORA was supported and coordinated by IFCM in the city of Buenos Aires, will be continued.

Music institutions throughout the Republic of Argentina offer today interesting academic chances to those who wish to become choir conductors, including specializations in choral conducting at various municipal, provincial and national conservatories, schools and institutes of music as well as public and private universities and colleges. Training in the choral arts has increased steadily since the 1970s and there now exists a Masters Degree in "Choral Interpretation of Latin American Music of the 20th Century" awarded by the National University of Cuyo (Mendoza). Students come from various Argentinean provinces and also from Colombia, Chile and Brazil.

In spite of all these efforts, this new and welcome choral activity throughout our vast country must be supported by even more intense training, due to a great demand by amateur choir conductors wishing to professionalise their work. In this way, the ADICORA board and affiliate organisations (sixteen in total), along with delegations (numbering four), have in the first seven years of institutional life called into being numerous courses and workshops in choral conducting, conducting techniques, score preparation, style and interpretation of both Argentinean and international choral repertoire. Clinics, reading sessions, the creation of new repertoire, as well as conferences and lectures on topics related to these activities continue to attract great interest by choir conductors, teachers of music, and singers.

ADICORA has successfully organized two composition competitions of choral works and arrangements – the third one "Works for the Bicentenary" is well on the way to fruition. The organisation has also held two national conferences and five regional conferences directed towards children and the adolescent singer, and currently propels the development of projects related to the inclusion of children and youth choral singing in schools. It publishes two free magazines distributed to associates: "La 440" communicates activities among the affiliates and delegations, and includes the most relevant news on each semester and articles of musical interest; "Revista Anual" has, for numerous issues now, become an authentic tool of study with extensive articles directed at professional development for choral conductors.

As an institution, ADICORA supports all choir conductors in Argentina, and encourages the presence and participation of conductors and those involved in choral activities in our country during the lead-in to the next symposium. ADICORA wishes that all may be able to come to Puerto Madryn, even those from the most distant towns out in the country. We shall therefore ensure the provision of travel grants and scholarships, thus ensuring personal and professional growth and ushering in a time of more fluid relationships with international conductors and choirs of standing.

The sense of enrichment gained by all participants will have a multiplying effect in the regions where they can develop their activities, which is exactly why ADICORA considers holding the symposium in Argentina so essential. Argentinean choral activity will grow in quality and diversity, and Argentinean music – both arrangements and original compositions – will be shared with the International choral community. As an associate member of the International Federation for Choral Music, ADICORA congratulates IFCM and the CIC Foundation from Chubut for accepting the challenge of organising the 9th World Symposium on choral Music 2011 in the Republic of Argentina and looks forward to a new chance to enjoy the excellence of the choral music of the world.

Choral Memory

Developing & Sustaining Tonal Excellence in Choirs

Carol Beynon,
Jennifer Beynon-Martinec
and Jakub Martinec

As the title of this paper implies, the concept of choral memory, referring to the development and sustainability of a distinctive sound within a choir over a period of time, may be one indicator of the health and longevity of a choral organization. Is it possible that this term, derived from the business and administration theories of organizational memory may inform our understanding about development and growth in choirs? The authors of this paper have a cumulative 60 years of experience as conductors of boys' and men's choirs and the subject of the development of choral tone is a constant area of discussion and research in their work. We begin this paper with a brief narrative account.

The primary author was the co-founder of the community-based Amabile Boy' & Men's Choirs. While the numbers of male singers were reasonably constant and healthy, and parental and community support and enthusiasm were high, the first few years were a struggle musically. Each season, half of the treble choir would move into the male youth choir as their voices began the inevitable change process and we would start developing a sound all over again with 8 and 9 year old non-readers and inexperienced singer musicians. At the same time, the newly changed voices with their extremely limited range and unpolished tone quality would move into the developing Tenor-Bass choir, trying to learn to sing with a brand new and often unpredictable voice. As a result both the treble and youth male choirs sounded young and immature.

None of the story told thus far is news to anyone who has worked with boys' choirs anywhere in the world. Each time he heard us perform and listened to our frustrations about the lack of growth in choral tone, Amabile conductor colleague, John Barron

CM, would say that the choirs would develop a good choral tone over time and a sense of choral memory would emerge once the singers themselves had a concept of choral tone in their own minds. With patience and consistent, good teaching, he said the sound that we were seeking would begin to emerge, and once it was there, it would lock in and even the new choristers would almost automatically pick up our sound.

Coincidentally in the third season, four university students and experienced singers joined the Tenor-Bass youth choir, and even though they only represented four of the 25 members, their singing provided a solid foundation on which to build a more mature choral sound and provided examples for the younger adolescent boys to emulate. That season, finally, the choristers with younger voices began to make a dramatic change in developing an acceptable choral sound. The next season, the university students graduated and there was no one of similar voice or maturity to replace the former leaders. However, even though the older students were no longer in the choir, listeners commented on mature sound of the youth male choir. Having these four young men in the choir seemed to be the catalyst for the other singers to hear a model they wanted to emulate and to work harder to develop a better choral tone. During that one year, the older voices served to imprint the sound of the entire Amabile Young Men's Ensemble in a permanent way, and all of the singers began to understand and have a sense of the choral tone they wanted to achieve. Reverting back to the previous immature sound would have seemed obvious since the new members who came into the choir had newly changing voices without much tone colour. However, the highly-motivated singers and conductors moved collectively forward from that point to continue their development of a more mature and polished tonal quality within the choir. Their choral tone was a subject of constant subject of discussion amongst the members on a regular basis and the choir gradually became known for its artistic excellence and through a concept of choral memory, became known for its distinctive warm tone colour.

Their own choral experience and John Barron's sage advice about the concept of choral memory caused these authors to consider the concept of choral memory from a theoretical perspective. A search through the choral literature yielded no clues. Perhaps, we thought, organizational theory could help us to understand why certain choral organizations grow and flourish, while others remain static and/or unremarkable.

Organizational Learning

The ability for an inanimate object such as an organization to have personal capacities to learn seems unique. The pioneer of organizational learning theory, Peter Senge (1990) posits that learning occurs when organizations interact with their environments and grow or improve through increasing their understanding of what it is they do. While the actions an organization takes may be experimental, imitative, adaptive or carefully planned, an organization's ability to learn may make the difference between its thriving or perishing in the years ahead. The literature on organizations would indicate that an organization's growth—or lack thereof—becomes a collective of the people who work within that organization, and cumulatively, each person's action—or inaction—leads to or away from organizational productivity or what is called learning in the literature. In other words, it is the notion of a community of learners that 28 emerges in relation to organizational and cultural structure and change emanates from the understandings about the nature of learning. But, organizational/community learning is not merely the sum of the individual member's learning. In fact, it is—and this is a fact most applicable to choir development—the lowest common denominator in organizational learning. The research shows that individual learning, instead of guaranteeing learning, may indeed inhibit or prevent organizational growth. It is critical that the whole organization learn, not merely rely on one expert's knowledge (i.e., conductor) but to rely on social interaction for group learning (Mitchell & Sackney, 2000). The relationship, then, between individual and members within the community is critical, and is based on an interactional model of causation in which personal factors associated with individuals, environmental events and behaviours operate as interacting determinants of one another. Human learning in the context of a particular community of learners is not only influenced by the organization, but has consequences for it and produces phenomena at the organizational level that go beyond anything we could infer simply by observing learning processes in isolated individuals. Human rationality complicates the concept even further. Organizational learning occurs if any members (i.e., individual singers, conductor, or accompanist) and units (i.e., sections) acquire knowledge that can change the range of behaviours of the organization.

Organizational memory has been continually recognized as an integral component of an organization's ability to learn. Even when seemingly critical members leave the organization, enough collective wisdom or memory is left behind for incumbents and new members to make the organization continue to grow. Thus, a significant component of organizational learning is that of organizational memory. Organizational memory is grounded in information acquisition, storage, and transmission rooted in the beliefs, theories and ideologies of the culture which are conserved through systems of socialization, experimentation and control. Memory is knowledge stored in indexes and encyclopedic form and choirs (i.e., conductors, accompanists, singers) have vast stores of such information. Organizations have repertoires of activities for acquiring the information and improving what organizations can do. Building and modifying the repertoire are fundamental activities because they embody learning in routines, thus constituting a major form of organizational memory. Even when the participants leave, organizational memory protects the organization so it can survive and grow further (Senge, 1990). Building upon and modifying the repertoire constitute a major form of organizational memory (e.g., repetition of an existing piece of repertoire). Participants in an organization are the ones who decide on the worthiness of information that emanates from the leader and organizational memory is represented by the structures used to retrieve, organize, modify, and/or even make use of that knowledge. Participants decide how the information is coded, processed and even retrieved. Past experience is of utmost importance in creating change in an organization because memories of previous successes tend to invoke further risk-taking and dynamic innovation.

Choral Memory

While choral organizations are seen as instruments of the aesthetic, they are often based on a rationale and rigid structure that is linear, involves chain-of-command decision-making, differentiation of tasks, hierarchical supervision above and within the choir, formal rules and regulations, and professes certain ideologies. While social relationships are seen as an integral component of choirs, collaborative decision-making is not. Development may be based on repeated practices—regardless of participants—and change is both cosmetic and short-lived. But second order change or penetrating, intensive restructuring requires a deeper level of organizational management.

Choral memory is a multi-faceted phenomenon that evolves in a choir even in its first year of existence, involves learning and unlearning, and is essential for the growth of the organization. There is the memory that serves the bureaucratic structures of the choir, the memory that serves as a foundation for a music education program and applies to the individual level of each singer in the choir, and there is the choral memory of the sound that emerges and becomes idiosyncratic to the choir. As expert choral conductors work to transform vocal technique, musicianship and pedagogy into their concept of sound within the ensemble, the tonal quality develops and settles as a basic constant and consistent foundation over time. While the distinctiveness and singularity of that tone is a requisite to most conductors, it is maintained through continuous chorister development as well as conductor growth. Most conductors and their singers, however, are never totally satisfied with the sound even at its most mature level. Nor can they afford to be complacent in this regard because it is the ongoing development in technique, repertoire and performance standard that not only sustains the foundation of the sound but keeps improving it. It is this ongoing development in the learning community that ensures the choir is a healthy learning community. We posit that there are two factors at work: 1) it is the sustainability of the particular sound that indicates a healthy community of learners; and, 2) it is the ongoing strengthening and maturing of that choral sound that comes with longevity.

At the beginning of a new season, conductors of seasoned choirs often report that, even though a large percentage of the membership may have changed, it is always amazing yet ameliorating to hear the first warmups and recognize the distinctive but familiar choral sound of the choir. How does this happen? One would think that a choir's sound is based on the distinctive voices of the immediate singers and coloured by the personalities within the group. But, initial findings are showing that this is a false assumption. The indicator seems to be a sense of organizational choral memory that is more entrenched than the collection of individuals in the choir. This information was borne out in conversations we had with six choral conductors of excellent community-based children's, youth and adult choirs about the phenomenon of their choral sound in their choirs. Their comments served to affirm our belief that choral memory does evolve over time and indeed indicates that these choirs did become learning communities. The overall sound in elite choirs is coloured by the conductor's ability to train and develop that sound based on a particular preference that s/he has. Even idiosyncratic voices can be honed into a definitive sound that is particular to that conductor and this process begins with the advent of a new program or new conductor.

These experienced conductors told us that choral memory involves learning vocal technique and then unlearning certain technique as new and more advanced information and/or abilities replace preliminary instruction.

Organizational learning theory fits the context of the personal example with which we began this paper. In relation to tonal development in these beginning male choirs, John Barron wisely advised that a conductor must have a concept of sound in mind and must continue working toward it even though the environment is always in a state of flux. In this one case study, the university students contributed to both an event and a process of organizational learning because the choir as a unit was ready to learn; they worked together to develop a sound that not only began to emulate and complement the older singers, but also began to emerge as a cohesive sound unit. How this learning occurred is interesting and vital to understanding how choirs develop. The concept of choral memory has the potential for helping us understand how healthy choral organizations develop, and these initial findings point to a need for further research to explore the fit between organizational theory and choral development.

Interview with one of the Most Famous Contemporary British Choral Composers

ICB Managing Editor

Colin Mawby has been involved with music all his life. Born in 1936, he spent his formative years living and breathing church music at Westminster Cathedral Choir School in London. His talents were recognised by the Master of Music, George Malcolm, and from the age of 12 he assisted him with his huge load of fourteen choral services a week by playing the organ. Colin spent three years at the Royal College of Music studying with Gordon Jacob. During this time he also learnt a lot studying outside the College with Adrian Boult and working with Malcolm Sargent. After this he became first Assistant, and then Master of Music at Westminster Cathedral. In his years there he brought the Cathedral Choir to new prominence, with many appearances on the BBC as well as commercial recordings. The Choir was renowned for its clear - instantly recognisable - sound, and thrilling performance. Wishing to broaden his repertoire, Colin Mawby moved to Ireland to be Choral Director at Radio Telefis Eireann (RTE). He was later appointed Artistic Director of Ireland's National Chamber Choir, and is now their Artistic Director Emeritus. He has worked with many other music groups, notably the London Mozart Players, the Wren Orchestra, Pro Cantione Antiqua, the Belgian Radio Choir and the BBC Singers, and has performed before the Queen of England at St. Paul's Cathedral, President John F. Kennedy at Westminster Cathedral, and no less than two Popes at St. Peter's Basilica in Rome. Colin Mawby has written extensively for choirs, often providing music for special occasions or at short notice. His Haec dies, for example, was written and rehearsed on a train journey across Europe, prior to its prizewinning performance in Italy! He has written thirty-five masses, five song cycles, a very large number of settings for choir, two children's operas and a children's Christmas cantata which also includes an SATB group, flute, piano and percussion. A good few of these pieces started life as commissions, from Westminster Cathedral in London, Liverpool Cathedral, RTE Ireland, The Royal School of Church Music in England, The Cathedral of the Madeleine in Salt Lake City, USA, and Grace Church, New York, among others. His famous Alleluia which is sung all over the world was commissioned by the European Federation of Pueri Cantores. Colin Mawby has also worked with the written and spoken word - on BBC Radio 3, for Hans Keller and Basil Lam, and the UK-based newspapers and journals The Guardian, The Times, The Tablet, and The Listener. An entire chapter of the important British Organ Music of the Twentieth Century: The Composers, Their Music, and Musical Style by Peter Hardwick is devoted to Colin's organ music. His music is published by Dr J Butz Musikverlag, Kevin Mayhew, Oregon Catholic Press, Edition Music Contact, Carus-Verlag, the Gregorian Institute of America, EurArte, the Royal School of Church Music, Edizioni Carrara, Faber Music, Chappell, and Edition Ferrimontana. CDs of his music have been released by Warner Classics, EMI, Teldec, Hyperion, Oregon Catholic Press, Black Box, and Kevin Mayhew.

Andrea Angelini (AA): Colin, the first question is obvious. When did you decide to devote your creative energies to choral composition?

Colin Mawby (CM): I've always composed - mostly occasional music. However, when I was 51, my wife and I had our first child. Looking at him in his crib when he was just one month old, I saw that it was my duty to love him, support him and provide for his education. I then began to think of how I could increase my income knowing that apart from choral conducting, the only thing I could do was compose. I decided to devote myself to writing music in a structured and disciplined fashion. This has worked very well for me. Most other composers have told me that when faced with their first child they also tended to say to themselves: "I must find a way of earning a regular income and I can't do this with composition". I have been very lucky, thank God.

AA: Did you sing in a choir at school, and how has religion influenced your work?

CM: I went to Westminster Cathedral Choir School as a boy and we used to sing at fourteen services a week. The repertoire was mostly plainchant and polyphony. My love of choral music started with this experience and also the inspiration of our choirmaster, the famous harpsichordist and conductor George Malcolm. Religious belief is fundamental to my work. Without faith I couldn't compose.

AA: You once told me that you compose at least thirty bars a day. How can you maintain your inspiration?

CM: I've always said that the greatest inspiration is the arrival of a large electricity bill! I pray before writing but I can't tell if a piece is inspired until it is completed and performed. Very occasionally one's music is inspired, more often it isn't! Self-discipline and hard work are the basis of composition. One can't sit down waiting for inspiration like manna from heaven. One must just get on with it, particularly on those days when one doesn't feel like doing it.

AA: Have you ever composed according to the "Darmstadt Canons"?

CM: I've written twelve tone music but have given it up. The experience was totally arid.

AA: Composition is fascinating, but young composers find it difficult to find their own voice. Do you have any advice for them?

CM: Detailed study of harmony and

...Colin Mawby in Front of the Mirror

counterpoint is essential. Listen to and play as much music as you can and make a point of hearing the works of composers that you don't like. Do not follow musical fashion or set out to make your work sound contemporary. If you like what you write, the chances are that other people will do so as well. Be true to yourself and write from your soul. Don't seek the approval of music critics, their opinions are of little value.

AA: I am impressed with the mould breaking "tintinnabuli" style of Arvo Pärt with which many composers have experimented with variable results. Is it wrong to imitate the work of other composers or should one just be grateful for the new sound world that they create?

CM: I believe that the only totally original ideas in music are major and minor scales. Most Western music derives from them and it is a matter of total amazement to me that billions of totally different compositions come from twelve notes. This mirrors nature – human beings come from a small cell; oaks grow from acorns; the universe from an explosion – all incredible. Composers learn from the work of others and recreate ideas into their own style and sound world. There's nothing wrong with this particularly as it's very difficult to write completely original music. In a way, it's arrogant to imagine that one can do this. Respect the work of other composers but learn from their technique and style.

AA: What is the place of contemporary music? Do listeners prefer the work of previous generations?

CM: Listeners are very suspicious of modern music and this is mainly the fault of those contemporary composers who write cerebral music which has no connection with ordinary people. Music must speak to the soul and a lot of modern music doesn't. It might speak to fashionable music critics but they are a very limited and self-important bunch of people who have done great damage to contemporary composition. I always recall the critic who wrote of the first performance of the Eroica Symphony that if it wasn't shortened, it would never be played again. (I equate this with the extraordinary comment in a British newspaper which wrote, on the opening of the first London underground train system, that people would never use it.) Contemporary music should reflect modern culture and appeal to audiences. Unfortunately much of it doesn't and this is one of the main reasons why listeners prefer the work of long dead composers. I used to live near the Slane pop festival in Ireland and it's a sad commentary on modern music that one could see tens of thousands of young people walking to Slane from Dublin while it would be considered a triumph if fifty people attended a concert of contemporary classical music.

AA: Will you please tell us of your recent commissions?

CM: I receive a great number of commissions. I was asked to write two Fanfares for the recent Installation of the Archbishop of Westminster (London). I have just completed a Mass for a large church in Canada; I have also composed a song for a young people's choir which they will sing at the Welsh Eisteddford and a fun piece for the anniversary dinner of the Irish National Union of Students. I have also written recently for an American church and also the German Pueri Cantores. I seem to keep very busy.

AA: What contemporary composers do you like?

CM: This is a very difficult question. I tend to like the piece that I am listening to. I have no favourite composers - I admire most of them.

AA: I am an Italian and I'm sure you agree that Italian wine is the best, (Many apologies to my French colleagues!). I have heard you compare your better pieces to a good bottle of Amarone (a superb red wine) and am curious to know why?

CM: Amarone always reminds me of rich vocal sonority – both are splendid. It is a very strong wine and I always try to compose music that redounds with strength. The imagination of many composers is fired by wine and women – together they produce great songs! I like Italian wine, particularly when I am sharing a bottle with you, Andrea!

AA: Thank you, Colin, for the piece that you have written for us. Would you like to comment on it?

CC: At Westminster Cathedral, Mass on the feast of the Holy Innocents always used to be sung by the boys of the choir. I always looked forward to this and the text "Vox in Rama" moved me greatly. For some time I have wanted to set these words and the brutal killing of the nephew of my dear friend Ann has made the text live in a new and unique fashion. The piece is deeply sad and passionate – it needs emotional understanding and commitment in performance. As I was completing the work, the Irish police announced that they had charged a person with the murder of Ann's nephew.

Growing Up Singing

“Alternatives for life”

Germán Camilo Salazar Lozada
Manager Fundación Schola Cantorum de
Manizale, Columbia

On June 22nd 1902, after a bloody civil war called “the thousand days’ war,” president José Manuel Marroquín decided, with the support of the Catholic Church, to consecrate Colombia to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. However, this was merely a source for scorn and hopelessness in a nation which can give first-hand testimony of the horrors of war, hunger, and social inequality. From that moment on, many generations have come to know our country by the label of “Country of the Sacred Heart.”

It is not difficult to find people in Latin America who live in a situation of utter poverty and in social conditions which go far beyond the economic aspect of their lives and also affect the cultural and psychological aspects; and for whom a small drop of art, recreation, and education could become a sea of hope.

In June 2009 I had the good fortune to reconnect with Sandra Liliana González, a friend almost from infancy who was returning from Caracas after five years spent experiencing the use of choral singing as an element of change and social inclusion. The program, in association with the Schola Cantorum of Venezuela under the vision and musical direction of María Guinand and Alberto Grau, sought to integrate children and young people from a background of social risk into a high-level artistic dimension, promoting their abilities and talents and connecting them with a Venezuelan musical process that has obtained international recognition.

Motivated by her experience, Sandra aimed to replicate the Venezuelan model in Colombia, adapting it to the unique conditions of this country. It was at this first meeting that we decided to work together in order to build our own socio-musical process with willpower, tenacity, and commitment.

So in October 2009, the Fundación Schola

Cantorum de Manizales (Manizales Schola Cantorum Foundation) was created. Its social goals were to promote choral music and to create choral singing programs which would encourage musical development and social inclusion in this region of the country.

We then created the project Crecer Cantando (Growing Up Singing) which seeks to integrate children and young people in a permanent cultural dimension combining musical education with the strengthening of a system of civic values such as – among others – participation, dialogue, tolerance, solidarity, respect for differences, and healthy development of languages. The pilot project is being developed in Manizales, a small city located in the center of Colombia belonging to the Coffee Axis; it has a population close to 500.000 inhabitants and is known worldwide for its location close to the Nevaldo del Ruiz volcano. Manizales is nationally recognized as a city for academics with ten higher-education establishments (a large number, taking into account its population). But, like all cities in Colombia, Manizales suffers from social and economic inequality.

We took over funding the first two children’s choirs with our own resources. The first of these was linked to an institution that has distinguished itself for being in the forefront of “Inclusive Education” in the country despite its lack of resources. This institution seeks to educate students with learning disabilities resulting from physical, intellectual, emotional, and family problems, by putting them together with other students who do not have disabilities. The second choir was created in an organization belonging to the Catholic Church, which works with low-income children. This choir has 30 singers coming from socio-economic layers 1 and 2 (the lowest in Colombia) who from the beginning have shown immense motivation and interest in singing.

The work carried out with these choirs has been intense and, for obvious reasons, a little slower in comparison to any other group with different conditions and composition; but if there is anything egocentric in this work it is the personal satisfaction of seeing children with Down’s Syndrome, children with severe burns all over their bodies, abandoned children, children abused by their parents, autistic children and disabled children, all singing in unison with a big smile on their faces.

We have been working with them for five months, and the obstacles have been many, for the children are not always in the right mood to sing. The causes of this are numerous, and include malnutrition and personal conflicts driving from attention deficit disorder and hyperactivity. Given these situations, we have occasionally erred (never intentionally) through our lack of understanding of the personal condition of each chorister. This has compelled us to study each singer individually in order to improve shared interaction within the group, and to optimize both individual and group activities. As regards music, we try to use the same methodology because these children have the capacity and the right to be treated as equal, giving them the opportunity to become connected with society. It is a gratifying task, and one which we hope we will continue to perform thanks to the support of both of the institutions that have benefited from the results.

One of the most interesting aspects of this entire process has been the significant progress made by these children in other aspects of their lives. Some of their parents have told us of improvement in many fields: linguistic abilities, academic achievements, discipline, and interaction with others. These are some of the reasons that encourage us to continue with this process which, we hope, will become our greatest strength as an institution.

International Choir Competition of Tolosa 2009

In spite of the above, the major difficulty in this work is the acquisition of resources. The support of the private sector has been modest; and there has been no support from the government, which is difficult to understand given that Colombian laws, on paper, promote cultural development and tax benefits for organizations which support education and art.

In any case, without diminishing valuable efforts that have made an impact on our history in some way, it must be said that the development of artistic and cultural traditions in Colombia has been slow. This is another motivation that drives us, because we hope to contribute to these traditions through choral music, which we would like to see become the basis for our country's progress.

In 1994 the constitutional court declared that the consecration of Colombia to the Sacred Heart was unsustainable given the freedom of worship in our country. The epithet is still present on the street, but there are now many Colombians who, through their work and commitment, are seeking to change this state of affairs. The Manizales Schola Cantorum Foundation is working to build a nation through choral singing.

By itself, music is sublime; but through the medium of a human being music is noble, and it is in this second dimension that "Growing Up Singing" operates. It is there that we are promoting social change, where we have the space for music to embrace everyone who wishes to be enfolded by it.

Our project aims to promote all-round development. Any educational practice, any conceptual and cognitive process, is useless when its contribution to the growth of the individual is limited. This is why we strive to educate true nation-builders through music.

Art must always be a light of hope and an exaltation of the human spirit, in contrast with the developments of a world imprisoned by systems and conflicts; and this is ever more vital in a society so much in need of happiness and hope as ours. We are the artists called to illustrate and encourage this human and social aspect of music; and beyond mere teaching, we have an obligation to show others how to live through music.

Germán Camilo Salazar Lozada was born in 1986 in Manizales, Colombia. At the age of 10 he joins the marching band at "Colegio Mayor de nuestra señora" where he receives his first instruction in music. Later on he is accepted at the School of Fine Arts at Caldas University where he studies Classical Guitar for two years. In 2002 he joins the Opera Workshop at Caldas University and in 2003 he begins his Bachelor in Music at the same institution. Salazar Lozada did his student teaching as a professor of Music Theory and Musicianship at Caldas University. He is currently a music teacher in many elementary schools in Manizales and General Manager of Fundación Schola Cantorum de Manizales. E-mail: camiloksl@gmail.com

Disney Magic Music Days Performance Showcase

WINTER CHORAL FESTIVAL™ AT HONG KONG DISNEYLAND RESORT 6 - 10 DECEMBER 2010

REGISTER NOW FOR AN EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME!

The inaugural Winter Choral Festival™, held at the Hong Kong Disneyland Resort is designed to provide an educational and enriching music learning experience for choirs through workshops, performance and adjudication. The performance venue and sites in the Park have been carefully chosen to ensure the highest performance quality possible.

A panel of distinguished adjudicators will provide participants with detailed and constructive comments on their performance. Furthermore, each choir will enjoy a 90 minute clinic with one of the adjudicators of their choice, who will be able to give personalised feedback for the choir.

We invite you to join us on this magical music journey together, which promises to be inspirational, exciting and fun. Hope to see you there!

Interview with Johan Geerts

Coordinator of Polyfoon, about the Recording Policy of Ensemble Polyfoon

Emmanuel Noisette de Crauzat
opusChoral Director

Polyfoon, a Belgium vocal ensemble directed by Lieven DEROO, has recorded three albums: Summa Passionis, Ante et Nunc and Triptic

You can find all the information about these albums and about Polyfoon on their website www.polyfoon.be Emmanuel Noisette De Crauzat (ENC): please give us some information about the choir (its history, organisation, membership etc), about its director and about the music that you sing.

Johan GEERTS (JG): in 2009, Ensemble Polyfoon was ten years old. We celebrated this with the recording of our third CD, Triptic. This CD comes with a booklet showing all the highlights of our first decade.

Ensemble Polyfoon is a group of approximately 24 singers specializing in old and new polyphony. Our mission is to sing this a cappella polyphony and combine it with other music or art forms.

In original cross-over projects we collaborate with actors, painters, composers, other singers (Russian orthodox music, plainchant, etc), pop musicians (K's Choice), etc.

In each vocal section there are six singers, divided into high and lower voices: three high sopranos, three mezzo sopranos, three altos, three low altos, three high tenors, three high baritones, three low baritones, three deep basses.

Our conductor is Lieven Deroo. He is a professional singer and a member of the only fully professional choir in Belgium, the Flemish Radio Choir. He is/was a member of some famous vocal ensembles: Huelgas Ensemble, Capilla Pratensis, Ensemble Psallentes, Currende, etc.

The organisation is very simple: Lieven is responsible for the musical direction, I'm responsible for practical organisation and for artistic vision and new projects. Dirk – baritone and graphic designer – is responsible for communication and promotion.

From each group of voices (SATB) someone is appointed to liaise between Lieven/myself and the singers.

ENC: when did you decide to record your choir, and did you decide to publish the recordings right from the beginning?

JG: Our first CD 'Ante et Nunc' is the result of our first five concert years. It's an overview of our first concert programmes, a combination of known and unknown and old and new polyphony. The 'hit' of the CD is 'Miserere Mei' by Gregorio Allegri.

We tried to find a commercial distributor for this CD but none were forthcoming, so we decided to produce it on our own and find some distributors. This, too, turned out to be a problem, and in the end we decided to do everything ourselves, and it was a huge success. We sold nearly 5 000 copies of this first CD! In a small market as that of classical music, this was a great achievement!

ENC: is the financial aspect important for the recording process?

JG: Of course it is. Among our strengths are the graphic design and our promotional tools. The booklets and the packaging of our CDs are well designed with a lot of attention to making clear our overall mission. All our concert posters are published on our website. For some of our 'fans', these became collectors' items.

Hiring a good recording engineer, renting a perfect recording venue, mastering, producing and pressing the CD, promotion ... If you want to launch a quality product you have to invest a lot of money. When you have recorded a CD, in the beginning the stock is 'dead money', you have to invest the whole production cost in advance and you have to hope it will be a commercial success.

ENC: how do you organize your recording sessions?

JG: Recordings are planned over a year in advance because of the availability of the singers and the conductor, with two sessions in spring and one in autumn. It is very important to release CDs in November, because of the winter holidays and Christmas.

Our last recording session was in October 2008, with the editing being done in November 2008. Not every singer is involved in each piece of the CD, so good planning is essential to avoid wasted time. Also good financial planning is important! Subsidies from the Flemish Government were requested several months in advance.

ENC: how do you decide on the repertory of your recordings?

JG: The repertory is typical for Ensemble Polyfoon. As I said, we always try to combine old and new a cappella polyphony. It's just like that on this latest recording. The CD is the result of a year-long project in 2007-2008. 'Triptic' was a triptych with six concerts with music for Christmas, Easter and All Saint's Day. The concerts were spread over a year.

We collected the most beautiful and representative pieces of those concerts including two wonderful compositions specially written for us by two young Flemish composers, Willem Ceuleers and Geert D'hollander. This is also typical for ensemble Polyfoon: we often commission works from young composers who are working in the old polyphonic style or who are writing music referring to this style. This recording is definitely a typical Polyfoon production: a combination of old and new polyphony.

ENC: your choir has recorded several CDs. Do you think that some things evolve concerning the process and the result?

JG: Yes, the first CD was an anthology of our first five years with highlights such as Allegri's 'Miserere'. The sound and result is very good, you hear all the qualities of the group, but it's not that mature.

Our second release was a themed CD with music for Holy Week and Easter, a combination of plainchant and old and new polyphony. It's a beautiful CD but the music is typical for only one season of the year.

The third CD 'Triptic' is mature and contains both known and unknown music from old and new times. The group of singers has been constant for by now more than five years. It's clear this CD is the most accomplished one, a clear programme with a clear structure, the result of ten years of hard work. Also enclosed with the CD you'll find a booklet describing the highlights of our first decade! It brings back memories of all our concerts, concert trips and recording sessions with beautiful pictures, comments by fans, etc.

ENC: for the next recordings, what will you want to change about the organization of these recordings?

JG: Not much. I think it's important to combine known and unknown music. New music by contemporary composers is also important. We believe we have something to give to our listeners: a nice booklet, very extensive information and beautiful artwork. A CD has to be something to cherish, not only for those who produce it but also for those who buy it.

ENC: can you make some suggestions to other choirs?

JG: If Ensemble Polyfoon is successful, we can say this is due to our remaining true to our philosophy and to being faithful to our mission statement.

Everybody knows what Ensemble Polyfoon stands for! We will never sing with soloists, never work with orchestras or instruments. We sing a cappella polyphony from old and new times to a very high standard.

There are a lot of choirs who sing all kinds of music: polyphony, baroque, romantic, close harmony, contemporary music ... Ten years ago we chose to sing a cappella polyphony, and we keep doing just that. We combine this music with other arts or kinds of music in cross-over projects, but we will never abandon our mission of giving our concert audiences and CD customers quality in all aspects of producing a concert or a CD: repertoire, artwork, quality of voices, quality of music, quality of performance, location, promotional material. Everything has to be high quality.

Otherwise you're not fair to your singers, your fans and your customers.

Triple Play: Choral Scores Of, By and For Women

Dr. Marian Dolan
Choral Conductor

Occasionally I receive an interesting and unusual score inquiry. A few months ago, a colleague asked me for suggestions of scores with texts of women poets, with music by female composers, in settings for women's chorus. An interesting "triple play" idea for a concert program or an ICB review column! This article was completed on International Women's Day (8 March), a global day of celebrating the economic, political and social achievements of women past, present and future – a timely occasion to also celebrate the work of some excellent choral composers. After searching my own score files, emailing conductors and composers, and scouring the internet, here is a treasure of powerful, insightful, challenging, and fun repertoire "of-by-for" women. Some information is given here; a version of this article with live internet links to composer's websites, scores, audio files, as well as links to poet's information is also available online (www.TheChoirProject.org).

USA

A number of fine American composers' scores fit the "of-by-for" category. A real gem is Joan Szymko's The Beauty of Your Dreams, a setting of Eleanor Roosevelt's vibrant and powerful texts: "You gain courage and strength and confidence every time you look fear the the face; cast out fear and face the unknown with courage and integrity and a high heart; the future belongs to those who dream." Wife of the President and iconic voice of her generation, Eleanor Roosevelt wrote a newspaper column called "My Day" which appeared six days a week from 1935 to 1962 and had a readership of over 4 million. Szymko's score beautifully embodies the clarity, reflectiveness, and strength of the texts in a homophonic choral setting for ssaa and piano. (Example 1)

Ysaye Barnwell's "Crossings," which includes Wanting Memories and No Mirrors in My Nana's House, was originally commissioned by choreographer David Rousseve for a dance-theater work of the same title. Sweet Honey in the Rock, the Grammy award-winning African American female a cappella vocal ensemble (www.sweethoney.com) of which Dr. Barnwell is a member, subsequently recorded both works. The six voices in Sweet Honey have a wide range, so the published choral transcriptions / arrangements of these pieces are notated as 5-part mixed-voice, but can be sung by a women's ensemble which, like Sweet Honey, has strong low altos. The rhythmic propulsion of Memories carries the unfolding story, written by the composer: "I am sitting here wanting memories to teach me to see the beauty of the world through my own eyes. I think on the things that made me feel so wonderful when I was young ... that made me laugh, made me dance, made me sing ... that made me grow face the un-known with courage and in-teg-ri-ty and a

I only knew love and I didn't know hate."

A powerful, up-tempo gospel piece is Rosephanye Powell's Still I Rise, scored for ssaa, soloist and piano with optional bass and drum set. As the composer explains, "Still I Rise was inspired by the poem of the same name by poet laureate Maya Angelou. It is a women's anthem, saluting the strength of women to persevere through life's difficulties: low self-esteem, physical and emotional abuse, rape, incest, prejudice, abandonment, and such like. In summary, though a woman's life or past may be filled with tears and heartaches, with each day that she finds herself still living, she finds that she has grown stronger and risen a little higher because her circumstances have not overcome her. Thus, every new day can be one of hope and joy because regardless of the past, today, 'still I rise!'" Scored for ssaa divisi, Rise is rhythmically powerful and energetic for the chorus, and takes a good gospel soloist who can improvise in the 'shout' section of the score. An audio sample is on the composer's website.

Carol Barnett's The Day of Hope is an accessible three-movement, 12 minute work in honor of Shirin Ebadi, Iranian human rights lawyer and recipient of the 2003 Nobel Peace Prize. The score includes Ebadi's texts along with those of Persian poets of the 11th through 14th centuries, all of which speak of human rights and freedom from violence. "The music is a free translation into the Western choral idiom of traditional Persian music, its exotically ornamented monody..." explains the composer. Oboe, harp and percussion instruments including doumbek, sistrum, rain stick and rattles accompany voices, mainly homophonic, which are often in two or three parts. Truly a beautiful and very powerful score.

Chant for Great Compassion was written by Abbie Betinis in response to the earthquake that took the lives of nearly 70,000 people in Sichuan Province, southwestern China, in May 2008. Betinis explains that her score "is for anyone in any need or trouble. It is about calling out for strength and courage – as individuals and also on behalf of our generation. The opening melody is inspired by the traditional chant to the Buddhist goddess Guan Yin, whose name means 'she who hears the cries of the world'. To comprehend the needs of so many, her head split into eleven pieces, hence the 11-part chords in the score." Voiced for ssaa-divisi, the texts in the score are from Chinese writer and elegant orator Qiu Jin, Sichuan journalist and editor Wang Erbei, and the 7th Great Compassion Mantra.

Canada

Eleanor Daley, based in Toronto, has garnered quite an enthusiastic following for her scores. From her larger work Requiem, comes In Remembrance, originally voiced for mixed choir, now available for women. The text, often cited as 'anonymous,' is now known to be by Mary Elizabeth Frye: "Do not stand at my grave and weep, I am not there, I did not sleep; I am a thousand winds that blow, I am the diamond glint on snow..." The imagery is treated largely homophonically with great lyric sensitivity and rubato. The Gate of the Year, scored for ssaa and soloist sets Minnie Haskins uplifting text, "Give me a light that I may tread safely into the unknown. Lux aeterna." Ruth Henderson's When I am an Old Woman is pure fun! Nancy Telfer's Fireworks literally embodies in sound-syllables a fireworks display complete with crackling, fizzing, popping and explosions of vocal colors! Rachel Sauvé's Automne, beautiful settings of ancient Japanese texts, is a hidden gem.

- Eleanor Daley: In Remembrance (Mary Elizabeth Frye; Eng; ssaa; 3'; Alfred Music VG-272); The Gate of the Year (Minnie Louise Haskins; Eng; ssaa, S solo; Walton Music); Echo (Christina Rossetti; Eng; ssaa, pf; Alliance #639)
- Ruth Watson Henderson: When I Am an Old Woman, I Shall Wear Purple (Jenny Joseph; Eng; sa-div, pf; Roger Dean 15/2594R); Landscape (Lucy Jun; Eng; ssaa, pf; Treble Clef TC-264)
- Nancy Telfer: Butterfly (N. Telfer; Eng; Eng; ssa acap; Earthsongs S-27), Fireworks (N. Telfer; syllabic; sssaaa; 5'; Edition Choris Mundi #11.07.149).
- Rachel Sauvé: Automne: Trois Poèmes Japonais (anon; ssa-div; www.myspace.com/rachelsauve)

Europe

Finland has experienced a strong resurgence in ancient women's texts and traditions, which, in turn, has influenced the creation of many new settings and arrangements of these stories and texts for women's ensembles, including: Riikka Talvitie: Jako (Helena Sinervo; Fin; ssaa; 5'; Sulasol); Mia Makaroff: Namnlösa klippan and Kämpande: För att minas (Heidi von Wright; Swe; ssaa; Sulasol); Kynnykselia (M. Makaroff); Tellu Turkka: Enkelit / Angels, Minne kauneus katosi, Etsijä / Seeker, Mehiläinen (ssaa-div; Sulasol); Others: Säde Rissanen, Liisa Matveinen, Anna Mari Kähärä

Sweden's Karin Rehnqvist has set a number of texts by Edith Södergran, a Swedish-speaking Finn, who endured the Russian Revolution, extreme poverty and died of the effects of tuberculosis at 31: Ingenting / Nothing (Edith Södergran; Sw/Eng; ssaa, alto fl; 6'; Ed. Reimers); Ljusfältet / Fields of Light (Edith Södergran; Sw; ssaa; 2'; Ed. Reimers); Trumf att finnas till / A Triumph to Exist (Edith Södergran; Sw; ssaa; 11'; Ed. Reimers). Susanne Rosenberg, recognized as a leader in Sweden's various folk traditions, has a number of folk-inspired settings (www.susannerosenberg.com).

One of Estonia's most important living composers is Ester Mägi. Two of her 8 treble scores have texts by female writers (SP Muusikaprojekt #2504 – Mägi collection): Kauge maa / A Distant Land (Katrin Väli; Est; ssaa; 2'), Kevad-sonett / Spring Sonnet (Marie Under; Est; ssaa; 3'). So also Miina Härma's Ei saa mitte vaili olla / I Cannot Remain Silent (Anna Haava; Est; ssaa; 2').

In an "of-by-for" review, one would naturally think of the stunning chants and texts by medieval German abbess Hildegard von Bingen. Contemporary German composer Sylke Zimpel's (www.sylkezimpel.de) treble scores frequently appear on European festival and competition lists. Most are published by Edition Choris Mundi (ECM). Some examples include: Antwort (Rose Ausländer; Ger; ssa; 1'20; ECM-11.09.189); ... dass Töne tragen können (Hildegard Jahn-Reinke; Ger; ssa, S solo; 1'25; ECM-11.06.102); Und oben schwimmt die Sonne davon (Elisabeth Borchers; Ger; ssa, solos, speaker and sound-bowl; 12-score cycle, ECM-31.06.104-115); Dreistufige Drohung (Sarah Kirsch; Ger; ssa; 1'20; ECM-11.09.101).

The land of the Scots, in song and text and tradition, is embodied Sheena Phillips' scores by-of-for women (published by www.canasg.com or www.sheephillips.com). Incantation for ssa, is the traditional Gaelic invocation of St. Brigit. Land o' the Leal (ssaa) is an arrangement of Lady Nairne's lullaby and lament for a lost child. The Winter Wood (ssa, pf) is a 10 minutes, 3-part cantata based on the poetry of Jean Kenward. Phillips also set three Emily Dickinson texts in the score Sea Pieces for ssa choir.

Australasia

Australian Sandra Milliken's (www.sandramilliken.com.au) "by-for-of" scores include a setting of her own text in The Gift (ssaa or sa, pf; Sulasol) and 5 piece collection Lumi ja jää / Snow and Ice for ssa to texts by Kirsi Reinikka (Sulasol), a Finnish professor at the Univ. of Queensland in Australia. The Gift is about "looking for the beauty in everything, especially the small things, like in nature, in the tiniest flowers. I think that finding beauty in music can also be found in the smallest details - word painting, nuance, etc." New Zealand "by-for-of" scores include Train Song by Cheryl Camm (www.cherylcamm.co.uk) for ssa to a text by Lauris Edmond, Jenny McLeod's settings of Janet Frame's poetry, and Dorothy Ker's close-up of a daisy (ssaa) to a text by Ruth Dallas.

So for all of you who conduct women's ensembles, have a grand time planning "of, by, for" programs. And please send me information on your favorite scores for a second "of, by, for" column!

Marian E. Dolan is founding Artistic Director of The Choir Project based in Naples, Florida (USA), has edited international choral scores for four publishers, and was IFCM's chairperson for Voices Conferences in South Africa and the Baltics. She holds MM, MMA and DMA degrees in choral conducting from Yale University and was on the faculty of Emory University (Atlanta). GET AN INSTANT GRASP OF YOUR MUSIC.

The new MUSICFOLDER.com RingBinder

Nothing holds music scores better than rings. And our new RingBinders come in 2, 3 and 4-ring standard spacings. Things like a card holder, storage pocket and clear program pocket give you even more reasons to firmly embrace your repertoire.

Visit our website to find your nearest retailer or order online. Or give us a ring.

Detachable bottom strap on new RingBinder lets it open flat when needed. Available in standard 4-ring, 3-ring or 2-ring (right) versions.

Secure hand strap on all our choral folders adds to your singing confidence.

SING BRILLIANTLY! It's hard to sight-read when it's too dark to see your score. Both the single-head XtraFlex and twin-head DUET lights use ultra-efficient LED bulbs that last a lifetime and run many hours – up to 40 in the XtraFlex, and 20 in the DUET – on one set of AAA batteries.

STAMP OUT ANONYMITY

Permanent foil stamp adds an elegant touch and easy identification to any folder. Imprint your name or choir logo in gold or any of several other colours.

DON'T BLOW IT!

PocketTones™ electronic pitch pipe is more accurate and sanitary than mouth-blown and small enough for a key chain. With handy on/off switch and volume control.

FEELING SCATTERED?

New MUSICFOLDER.com GIG BAG tote music, folders, daytimer, water bottle, pitch pipe, lunch – even a change of clothes. An indispensable musical vehicle when you're carrying more than tunes.
